Stop the Runaways!

RAN AWAY from the subscriber, on Saturday, the 22nd of July, a negro man named JIM. Jim is a stout, strong built negro, aged about 35 years, dark complexion, with thick lips, flat nose, and features generally of a heavy cast; his clothing not recollected, but I believe they consisted chiefly of homespun.

Also, at the same time, a mulatto girl named RACHEL, the property of William Black, living in Providence settlement, in this county. Rachel is about 35 years old, five feet six inches high, has a small scar down the left side of her neck, is a smart active negro and fond of dress; her clothing, when she left here, cannot now be specified. Jim and Rachel being man and wife, they are doubtless together. It is not known where they will make for; but as Rachel, on a former occasion, was taken up in Randolph county, where she had lived some time, it is possible they may have gone there. Any person delivering both or either of the above named negroes to the subscriber, or securing them in such way that I can get them again, shall be suitably rewarded, and all reasonable expenses paid.

House of Entertainment,

AND Stage House, at the sign of the Eagle, in Charlotte, North-Carolina, by 14136 ROBERT WATSON.

THE subscriber offers for sale a valuable tract of Land, on accommodating terms, which lies in the lower part of Mecklenburg county, on the head waters of Rocky River, adjoining the lands of G. S. Houston, Benjamin Brevard and others, and containing 272 acres. The said land is of good quality and well watered, both as to springs and branches. Of the land now in crop, amounting to 40 or 50 acres, the most of it is well manured and will produce corn, cotton or wheat, in sufficient quantity to abundantly compensate the husbandman for his labor. Experience has proven that it is peculiarly adapted to receive great and permanent benefit from manure.—There is on it a large portion of low grounds of excellent quality, either for meadow or pasture, 10 or 12 acres of which are in good order and have been mowed for a number of years. The principal dwelling-house is large and commodious, which, with a little additional expense, might be made comfortable and convenient even for a large family. The situation on which it stands is probably equal to any in this or the adjacent counties. There is a well of good water convenient to the house, and a large, fertile garden. There are two improvements on this tract, which will be sold together or separately, to suit purchasers. It would be a desirable place of residence for a member of the profession of Law or a Physician, being in a respectable and populous neighborhood, and at nearly an equal distance from five surrounding villages. It is unnecessary to give a further description of this land, as those, no doubt, wishing to purchase will view the premises. The terms, apply to the subscriber, living 5 miles north of Concord, Cabarrus county.

A. C. W'FREE.

N. B. Approved cash notes, or notes negotiable and payable at the Charlotte Bank, will be received in payment. A. C. M. 824

Tailoring Business.

THE subscriber having contracted with Mr. T. Compton, for the purpose of establishing the above business in Charlotte, begs leave to inform the citizens and public at large, that he has commenced in a room joining the Eagle Tavern, where he is prepared and will be happy to accommodate any gentlemen who may feel disposed to encourage him. He assures the public, that nothing will be wanting on the part of the conductor of this business, to render every customer satisfied: his work will be done in the most fashionable, durable and neat style, and prices accommodating. Those of the fashionable part of the community need not apprehend any danger of not having their work executed in a style to cope with any in the United States. The subscriber receives the fashions quarterly from Philadelphia, and in a manner from which he need not vary in the smallest degree. He also proposes doing work by direction, if there should be a gentleman who do not wish to keep pace with the fashionable part of the public. This establishment shall be permanently fixed, if it should meet with sufficient encouragement to justify its continuance; of which, from the number of subscriptions to commence, the subscriber feels no doubt.

Miscellaneous.

The following extracts are from Cobbett's Register of the 12th July.

"I state distinctly, that I believe that the present trouble will lead to general and dreadful convulsion in the country, unless my remedy be applied; and I say that the details of that remedy shall not be made known, unless I am in Parliament. I have said this before: I say it now: and, most assuredly, I will stand to it. Nothing shall be done by me to prevent any calamity to the country, unless I be in Parliament. I will keep on exposing the wickedness or stupidity of measures that are adopted; I will keep on, when it answers my purpose, to say what I think will happen; keep on discussing the several subjects connected with these embarrassments and this distress; but never will I put upon paper the details of any plan for the cure of the evils, unless I be first placed in Parliament.

"And, though Sawney affect to laugh at this, this is no laughing matter, with a very great part of the people of this kingdom. It is possible that I am a vain boaster, and that I possess no such remedy as I talk of; but, nineteen-twentieths, if not ninety-nine-hundredths of the people believe that I do possess it; and that is pretty nearly as good as if I did. It signifies not much what the fact is; but I am quite sure that the people of England believe me to understand these matters better than all the other men in England put together. Ten thousand times my ears have been saluted from the lips of men that I had never seen before, and was never, in all probability, to see again: 'Here's the cleverest man in England;' 'there's the cleverest man in England;' 'here we have got the cleverest man in England;'—'now,' said a man that jumped up on the back of my carriage to shake hands with me, as I was going into Bolton—'now,' said he, 'I can say that I have shook hands with the greatest man in England.' This was their general cry; and when they came expressly from twenty or thirty miles' distance to shake hands with me, they seemed in ecstasy of delight to think that they had succeeded in seeing and shaking by the hand, him whom almost all of them called the 'cleverest man in England.'

Now, it is just possible that all these may be people of unsound judgment. At any rate, they were not parasites: they could not be flatterers: they had never seen me before, and they were never to see me again. They were not half-bred vagabonds like the vile newspaper proprietors of London: their words were not paid for at so much the piece; the man whom they were praising had nothing to give them, and no power on earth to serve them. The King had some precious praises bestowed upon him by his Irish, Scotch, and Hanoverian subjects: in exchange for the whole of them, I would not give the words of a poor weaver in Blackburn, who lifting his little girl up in the crowd, and pretty nearly in the dark, held her towards me to shake hands with her, and then, taking her down, said, 'There, now thast 'shooken hands wi' th' cleverest man in England.'

"They may be mistaken in all this; but this is their opinion. Nobody can root the opinion out of them; and in a case like this, it is not so much what is, but what is believed to be. The great thing of all, when a strong and extensive remedy is to be applied to national evils, is the confidence of the people; and whether merited or not, that confidence I have from the people of England, to a thousand times greater extent than any other man alive. This is my sincere belief; and I should not be afraid to put it to the test against any other man, and in any part of the Kingdom. Nor is this so very surprising. I have written, and published about ten millions of copies of books, of various sorts, little and big; if the whole of the print were spread out upon the ground, and supposing the print to be only on one side of the paper, it would cover upwards of 6000 statute acres of land. I dare say that the Essays which I have written with a manifestly sincere intention to better the lot of the working classes, would, if all the printed sheets were spread out singly, cover ten or a dozen acres of land. Now all this has not been for nothing; infamous Newspapers and Magazines and Reviews have been bellowing at me all the time. Stupid and proud and insolent and base Aristocrats, aided by the Parsons, have always hated me; but, altogether, have not been able to prevent me from making a deep and universal impression upon the minds of the working and middling classes of people. Every where I have the confidence of these classes of the people. All the calumnies heaped upon me have been totally dissipated by time and by truth.

"Well then, this is being in reality a famous man. And famous for what? For his writings, to be sure, and for his speeches. And what have these writings and speeches been about? Why, dry politics; and particularly about matters, that now most vitally interest the country. Observe, too, that this is fame obtained without power, without riches, without powerful friends, without a party, and without ever having acted the part of a demagogue. It is fame, arising from great natural talent, astonishing industry and perseverance, a sincere love of country, and an anxious desire and constant endeavour to secure the liberty, and to promote the honor and happiness of that country, and particularly to defend and protect the most defenceless part of the people. This is the foundation of my fame. Never was there a silder foundation; and the maxim which forbids a man to be the trumpeter of his own fame, does not apply to him who has three hundred scoundrel Newspapers, fifty Magazines and Reviews, an all devouring Aristocracy and Church, and endless bands of blackguard quakers, merchants and cotton lords combined against him.

"This then, is the subject on which we have been at issue, on which I have been opposed by a foolish, base aristocracy, by a greedy and malignant priesthood, by swarms of placemen, pensioners, sinecure-people, dead-weights, and other tax-eaters; and by every reptile in the kingdom who has appeared in print, including the servile proprietors of about three hundred newspapers. Time, as I told Lord Grey, three years ago, works for me. It has long been dividing the politicians into two parties—the Cobbetts and the Lord Charleses; that is to say, the men of sense, and the proud fools; and the grand question has been, and is, can the interest of the debt be paid in the King's coin? The Cobbetts say no: the Lord Charleses say yes."

LAWYERS.—One of the most undiminished species of domestic manufactures is that of the legal profession. In every state of the Union there are probably from ten to forty young lawyers added to the old stock every season. Such annual increase as this to the profession, must necessarily diminish the number of successful aspirants. It certainly does so. For of every hundred lawyers at an average, perhaps, a half a dozen make fortunes, a dozen make a living, and the rest do the best they can. It is of all other professions the most precarious, and doubtful of success. In our large cities, every rich man must have a son educated for the bar, but rich men's sons are the most unsuccessful of the whole tribe. A young man of fine taste, varied acquirements, delicate and courteous manners, very seldom succeeds in making his fortune in the practice of law. There is always a certain class of lawyers at our courts who give clients hints as to the selection of their lawyers, as it is called.—With such a class of persons a man of strong lungs, pert looks, impudent in attacks or retorts, and confiding assertions, always passes for a 'good lawyer,' and the man to make a bad cause look as well as a good one. Nat. Advocate.

HOLD AT BOTTOM.—A young fellow riding down a steep hill and doubling the feet of it was bogged, called out to a clown that was dithering, asked him if it was hard at the bottom? 'Yes, answered the countryman, it is hard enough at the bottom, I'll warrant you.' 'But in half a dozen steps the horse sank up to the saddle girths, which made the young gallant whip, snarl, curse and swear. Why, then, lying faced, had he the ditherer, didst thou not tell me it was hard at the bottom? 'Ay, replied the other, but you are not half way to the bottom yet.

Cries Nell to Tom, 'and mannaional strife,
'Curs'd be the hour I met your wife!
'By all the powers,' said Tom, 'but that's too bad.'
