

THE PRESIDENCY.

A late Richmond Whig has a column or so of remarks, in reply to a calculation in the Enquirer, on the result of the next Presidential Election...

Table with columns FOR ADAMS and FOR JACKSON, listing states and their respective counts.

The Whig then adds: "Leaving Kentucky doubtful men, the vote will stand, according to our calculation, based upon 'well ascertained and recorded facts'—for Adams 126—for Jackson 121.

Franking.—A joint resolution, giving the privilege of franking letters and packets, during the whole year, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, has passed both Houses of Congress.

A large meeting of the citizens of Randolph, Guilford and Davidson counties, friendly to the Administration, was held at Spring Hill, on the confines of the three counties, on the 22d ult.

The SERVANT greater than the MASTER.—The Speaker of the House of Representatives has recently issued an order, that all visitors in the gallery of the House, shall take their hats off.

Considerable excitement is said to prevail at Washington by reason of an edict of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, forbidding spectators in the galleries to wear their hats.

more than their servants. This theory is certainly reversed in the present instance of authority—for while the servants sit with their hats on, these same servants require their superiors—the people—who visit their sittings for curiosity or edification, to pull off their hats in their high and dignified presence!

In the House of Representatives, yesterday, we hear—for at the time of this being handed to the compositor, our reporter's account of the Proceedings had not yet reached our office—Mr. Randolph entertained his auditors with a discourse upon the reports of the Debates in Congress.

The pugnacious disposition of Mr. Randolph towards those laborers for the Public, the Reporters, has been so repeatedly manifested, that we have brought ourselves to look upon it as a constitutional infirmity, which it would be almost as unkind to advert upon as upon an obliquity of the sight, or a halt in the gait, of any one afflicted with such natural ailments.

As for the Register of Debates, we were rather surprised to hear that Mr. R. was very severe upon that work: for, of the speeches delivered by himself, which it contains, the greater part were either written out or revised by himself; and of the portion not revised by himself, he was furnished with our Reporter's rough draft, which he withheld from us, after having been furnished with it at his own request.

pose, whilst living he himself defaces. Nat. Intelligencer.

The remarks of Mr. Sergeant on Patronage, in his admirable speech on retrenchment, though peculiarly just and appropriate, are those to which most exception will be taken, by men in opposition; because they destroy their most plausible grounds for declaring against the administration.

Dr. Johnson, in his Rasseias, thus notices this subject of patronage:—Pittsburgh Gazette. I have lately been convinced that quiet is not the daughter of grandeur, or of power; that her presence is not to be bought by wealth, nor enforced by conquest.

Discontent will not always be without reason under the most just and vigilant administration of public affairs. None, however attentive, can always discover that merit which indigence or faction may happen to obscure, and none, however powerful, can always reward it.

He that has much to do, will do something wrong; and that wrong must suffer the consequences; and if it were possible that he should act always rightly, yet when such numbers are to judge of his conduct, the bad will censure and obstruct him by malevolence and the good sometimes by mistake.

Suspicious Liberty.—It is well known to our political readers, that Mr. Amos Kendall is the editor of the Kentucky Argus. There is no man, among the adversaries of Mr. Clay, who seems to have kneaded into his political opposition so large a portion of personal bitterness against that distinguished individual.

Mr. Amos Kendall was a prominent witness, full of zeal and redundant of testimony, in the recent investigation set on foot by the Kentucky Legislature into the conduct of Mr. Clay. If that investigation did not terminate into the disgrace of Mr. Clay, it was not because Mr. Kendall was defective in the inclination to object to that determination.

The reader may desire, for the honor of our common nature, so find some reason for this active ingratitude, which may place it in a less hateful light. We are at a loss to assign a reason. It may be found in the following facts: our readers can judge for themselves: A little before the late investigation, by the Kentucky Legislature, Mr. Kendall was in Washington, on terms of familiar, and, it is fair to presume, confidential intercourse, with the Opposition members of the Kentucky Delegation.

It is true, that no man has exhibited greater indignation on account of the assumed bribery and corruption on the part of Mr. Clay, than Messrs. Moore and Kendall, and it would therefore appear, if men are what they seem to be, that men so sensitive on the subject of political dishonesty, could not, in their own course, have been guilty of any acts kindred to these, the very naming of which makes them faint and sicken.

If the above-named check was given to purchase the admission of Mr. Amos Kendall to the Jackson party, we apprehend that the party has obtained but a fair bargain. The man who could prove traitorous to the noblest and most generous feelings of human nature, can never be bound long by a tie which is merely selfish and selfish.

On the 28th January, at the public meeting in Dublin, of the Irish Catholic Association, resolutions of thanks were passed for an address transmitted to that Association by a number of citizens of Augusta in Georgia.

"Our relations with America are becoming every day more interesting, and the policy of cultivating the friendship of the people of that country more important. Even in America, whilst the leaven of English influence remains, strong prejudices existed against our countrymen. These have gradually died away, and we now behold Irishmen, and Irish Catholics too, enjoying high offices, and possessing great influence in the state; even in the state of New York, the most powerful in the Union, the influence of the Irish obtained a majority in favor of Gen. Jackson.

Times change, and men change with them.

Some twenty years since republicans gloried in their simplicity, and in their contempt—we had almost said hatred—of all pomp, parade, show and splendour.—Jefferson used to ride on horseback to the Capitol, when President, and fasten his horse to a post with his own hands.

But times, and men too have sadly altered since those days. Now, a candidate for the Presidency goes with an escort 600 miles, on purpose to be feasted and flattered and sumptuously entertained; and deputations from men calling themselves republicans go 1800 miles to swell the pomp and retinue of his attendance, and to pour the honied strains of grateful adulation into his ears, as though he were an eastern despot, and they his humble slaves.

Not dollars, but endorsed packages, scattering the political rubbish of the Telegraph, under the frank of the Hon. T. P. Moore, was counted by a Kentuckian in the Maysville post office, a few weeks since.

We understand, that a free boy of color named Ned Carroll, was tried at Johnston Superior Court last week, for an Assault upon a white female, with an intent to commit a rape.

We learn from a private letter received in this city, from Richmond, that Jeremiah Baker, Esq. Public Treasurer of the State of Virginia, committed suicide a few days since, by hanging himself. Pecuniary embarrassment is assigned as the cause.

Strayed,

From the subscriber, on the 25th of March last, a small sorrel horse, blind in the left eye, white face and feet, and had a saddle and blanket on when he went off. It is not known where he was raised.

Taken Up,

On the 24th March last, and committed to the jail of Mecklenburg county, a negro fellow, who says he belongs to Hiram L. Sloan, of Fredell county. The owner is requested to come forward, prove property, pay charges, and take him away.
