EXECUTION IN CENTRAL AMERICA The Portsmouth (Va.) Transcript has been imformed by a gentleman lately from Central America, that Col. Don Francisco Alvarado, Commander of the Costo Rican forces at Fort Castillo, at the time of its capture by the Democratic troops under Colonel Frank Anderson, has, with his brothers been shot by sentence of a soi-

SEAMLESS BELTS manufacdisant court-martial. "Col. Alvarado stated, in his defence, that on his perceiving the Americans, he gave orders to his men to fire upon them; but they refused, threw down their arms, and cried "Viva Walker! Viva los Americanos!" (long life to Walker; long live the Americans.) He also stated that they said they preferred to be prisoners of Walker, rather than soldiers of Costa

> The above facts appeared in the Album. Spanish and English paper, published at San Jose, the capital of Costa Rica.

Amongst the prisoners taken on the above occasion, were two officers who had once before been captured. They earnestly requested permission to see General Walker, in order to thank him for the kindness with which they had been treated. Mr James Thomas, formerly of New Orleans, but for the last two years a resident of Nicaragua, and who had nothing to do with the Democratic cause, was shot about the same time. No crime was laid to his charge--nothing alleged against him further French, English, German, and American than this: "He is an American."

> Energy.-"The longer I live," says a great writer. "the more certain I am that the great difference between men, the great and the insignificant, is energy-invincible determination-an honest purpose once fixed and then death or victory. That quality will do anything in the world that can be done in the world; and no talents, no circumstances, no opportunity, will make a two legged creature a man without it."

We find the above going the round of our exchanges without credit. The author, whoever he may be, never penned a truer sentiment. It matters not how humble his calling, if a man have but energy, he must accomplish something for his day and

HUMOR IN THE PULPIT .- Old Bishop Aylmer, seeing his congregation pretty generally asleep, took his Hebrew Bible from his pocket, and read a chapter, which roused attention, when the old Minister sharply rebuked them for sleeping when they might have understood him, and listening when they knew not a word he He has just received, from D. Landreth & said. Of the witty Dr. South, it is said that, preaching before King Charles, he saw that potentate asleep; he stopped short, and in a loud and altered tone of voice three times called out, "Lord Lauderdale." His Lordship stood up and looked at the preacher, who addressed him with great composure. "My Lord, I am sorry to interrupt your repose, but I must beg of you not to snore so loud, lest you should wake the King." Andrew Fuller, one Sunday afternoon, saw the people, during the singing of the hymn before sermon, composing themselves for a comfortable nap, and, taking the Bible, he beat it against the side of the pulpit, making a great noise. Attention being excited, he said, "I am often afraid that I preach you to sleep, but it can't be my fault to-day, for you are BROKE JAIL :- Three prisoners escaped from the Guilford jail on Tuesday night. The escape was effected by sawing out a log, bending up the bars of iron which checked the logs composing the body of the house, and then bursting off the weather-boarding. It is likely they received outward assistance. One of the prisoners was recaptured on Wednesday, having returned home, a short distance in the country. money .- Greensborn Times.

LOSS OF THE EQUILIBRIUM BE-TWEEN SECTIONS.

The importance of a fair and permanent settlements of our sectional differences

gress on this continent. The Equilibrium between North and South which existed so long has been finally lost; and the fact of its destruction. never to be again restored. entirely changes the nature of our sectional agitations .-While the checks and balances of our pelitical machine were mutual, and sections were equally matched in the government, their quarrels were merely quarrels .-Whatever animosities might have mutualy existed or been exhibited, neither section feared any actual aggression; each felt a perfect security from the other in the practical working of the government. The passions of sections might be kindled into a flame, but they could take effect only in consuming rhetoric. So long as each other held a check upon the other in either one of the co-ordinate branches of the government, their wars could only be wars of words; the belligerent spirit could effervesce only in declamation; it could not possibly assume the form of actual aggression through the action of the government.

But the salutary equilibrium which has so long existed between the North and South, and has so long dwarfed their quarrels to mere disputes upon abstract oppositions, is now lost. The North has not only population two to one greater than that of the South, and an aggregate wealth of capital and material and industrial resources greater than the competing section, but it has a representation in the National Legislature, in one house targely predominant, in the other as positively though not as largely overpalancing. Hav ing possession of both branches of the National Legislature, the majority section would have now only to elect an Executive who should be animated by sectional animosities, and the work of aggression would cease to be a mere work of words, but become one of acts and deeds.

The equilibrium of sections is lost: first, in the great preponderance of the Northern population over the Southern; next, in the larger representation of that section in both Houses of Congress; and, finally, in the attainment, by the same section, of a majority of States-giving it, with its majority of population, the power, when it suits its pleasure, to elect a sectional President to do its sectional bidding. Not only has this equilibrium been lost in every depart ment of the Federal Government, but the preponderance which has supervened is likely to be argumented. For, the adoption of the principle of expansion which was incorporated into the compromises of 1850 and 1854-under which the populations which emigrate from the two sections into our new domain are allowed to settle the domestic institutions of new States by a majority of votes-must, in the nature of things, enure most largely and rapidly to the more populous section, having the greatest power of expansion. The preponderance of the North, already fully established, cannot fail, under the operation of this principle in the admission of future new States, to go on increasing and to in-

In this relative attitude, present and prospective, do the two great sections of the Union stand at present; and it must be plain to every comprehension that the question of interference by the stronger section in the domestic affairs of the weaker, has assumed a new significance. The South has always shown herself intensely sensitive under a mere abstract agitation of the slavery question, when she possessed power in one branch of Congress or the other, to prevent any actual measure in aggression. What must be her temper in the future, now that all branches of the government are under control of the North?

The security of the South is no longer in her power to enforce, but in the North's willingness to observe the Constitution. The agitation against her institutions ne longer involves merely a question of right. but has become also a question of will irrespective of right. The mere will of a Northern majority to interfere, harass, and agitate, has now all the significance that actual legislation would have had before. For no one can foresee what violence of aggression the inflamed passions of a reckless and blind Northern fanaticism may not drive the majority of the North into. Would it be singular or unnatural, if the South-recollecting the conduct of Northern Abolitionists for the last thirty years, doctrines they have proclaimed, and the purpose they have avowed-seeing them at last in the ascendant in almost every Northern State, and their counsels prevailing in almosts every Northern Legislature-anticipating that the action of the majority section organized as a section in the Federal Councils, may soon be in accordance with the sentiments of its popular and legislative majorities at home-we ask, if it would be unnatural, under these circumstances, if the South should, amid the important events that are occurring and are anticipated on neighboring portions of this continent, be very solicitous to know, at the present juncture of our own affairs, on what footing she is to stand in MARRIAGE IN NORWAY.

In Norway, we are told, the marriage ceremony usually takes place in winter. when traveling is comparatively easy, and grows greater and greater as events pro- the peasants are unoccupied. A week before the important day, messengers are sent round, to invite the proprietors and servants in all the neighboring farms. The room where the marriage is to take place is festooned with green boughs. huge pieces of beef, and large bottles of corn-brandy, have been prepared by the careful housewife, in royal abundance : and all the neighbors, for miles around, have contributed to supply any deficiency in the articles of china and plate. Soon the gallop of horses is heard, and the pretty, light sledges come jingling into the courtyard. The guests are received with a true northern welcome." They are made to sit down by the blazing fire. and plied with beer and corn-brandy, to counteract the benumbing effects of a winter's journey. The jingling bells are again heard without, heralding the approach of a fresh party; and thus the guests continue to arrive for hours, until two or three hundred people be believed that the bold dragoon who rode are assembled.

After a substantial breakfast has been discussed, the betrothed pair are brought forward by their relations and seated in state in the midst of the great room, on two chairs covered with a silk cloak. The priest blesses them, and, when the prayers are finished, proceeds to a table on which a servant has placed a large plate. Addressing the company generally, he recommends the young couple to their notice. Every one knows what the pith of

A MULE BEWITCHED.

A popular idea seems to be that the longared tribe have been deprived of the power of speech since the days of Balaam, but we nad this morning occular and auricular proof of the fallacy of this belief. As we were coming down Broad street, we noticed a little this side of the Planter's Hetel, a crowd collected around the wagon of a countryman, and we stepped up to learn, possible, the cause of the excitement.

The wagon was drawn by two mulesone of them rather a bad looking specimen, who seemed to hail from a region where corn and oats were rarities-the other decidedly better looking and giving unmistakable evidence, we thought of having been better fed. The wagon was loaded with that delightful esculent so popular in the South-sweet potatoes. Prominent in the crowd, we noticed a little black-eyed, gray haired man, who was busily engaged when we came up, in negotiating a trade for one of the mules-and strange to say for the

"Now, my friend," said the little man, I want this mule-I have a first-rate match for him and want to make out the pair. How old is he ?"

Five years last spring," replied the "Golly! what a lie!" cried the mule, pricking up his ears. Country started-the crowd looked rightened-and one or two colored gentlemen incontinently fled, as if the devil were of the party. "Who-who was that?" asked the dealer n potatoes at length, having somewhat recovered his voice and senses.

'Why me!' promptly responded the mule. What are you lying about? You know you have had me fifteen years." "There, my friend," said the little man, our male contradicts you -and he ought to know his own age." "I'll be derned if I know what to make of you or the mule," exclaimed the countryman, "know he's only five years old, for I raised him myself."

"There you lie again," said the mule. "Take that," exclaimed the infuriated wner, forgetting his fear for a moment, and striking the animal over the mouth. "Don't do that again," said the mule, or I'll kick you." The countryman's eyes almost popped out of his head, and there is no telling what would have been the result. had not some one arrived, who recognized the little man as Signor Biltz, the well known Magician and Ventriloquist-which explained the mystery and relieved the countryman. Augusta Dispach.

THE DIFFICULTIES BETWEEN

HARNEY AND SUMNER. Public sentiment at the Capital of the nation seems to be very decidedly in favor of the duel. An exchange of shots between two belligerent officers last week, and the excitement growing out of a very needless quarrel between Messrs. Clay and Cullom, seem not to have satisfied the residents of Washington, and they are now indignant because Gen. Harney would not fight Col. Sumner, and some of the letterwriters mention that it is said by every body that the former gentleman has shown the "white feather." Col. Sumner sent Gen. Harney a challenge, inviting him to the field of honor, and instead of accepting it the General sent it to the Secretary of War. We know nothing whatever of the merits of the personal controversy between these two heroes, and we have no desire to acquaint ourselves with the antecedent facts. In our judgment, the General acted very properly in transmitting the Colonel's hostile me-sage to the War Office. As for showing the "white feather," it will hardly like Murat through the thickest of the fight in the Mexican War, is a coward because he refuses to go out and exchange shots with another officer upon the duelling ground. If every man whose courage is firmly established would act as Gen. Harney has done in this affair, we might hope for a revolution in public opinion with regard to duelling .- Petersburg Express.

MIND WHAT YOU SAY BEFORE CHIL-DREN .- A gentleman was in the habit of calling at a neighbor's house, and the lady had always expressed much pleasure in seeing him. One day, just after she had remarked to him her happiness from his visit, the little boy entered the room. The gentleman took him on his knee, and asked

'Are you glad to see me, George ?' 'No, sir,' replied the boy. 'Why not, my little man ?' 'Because mother don't want you to come,

IMPORTANT METEOROLOGICAL DISCOV-ERY .- The Secretary of the Navy has received a letter from Lieut. Maury respecting a plan for computing the force of the wind, by which the latter gentleman thinks it probable that the liability to disasters on our northern lakes may be obviated to a considerable extent. He says that Prof. Bars Ballat, of Holland, claims to have discovered a proportional relation between the force of the wind and the difference of simultaneous barometic pressure at certain stations, by means of which he has succerded in deducing rules for calculating each morning the maximum force of the wind during the ensuing day. Prof. B. asserts that this system has been observed by him in Holland, and during five years the force of the wind has in no instance exceeded what his calculations indicated. To outward bound vessels on the lakes this would be of the highest advantage, as it powder and shot upon the Mormons. Let | would enable them to predict in the moruing whether they would be safe during the setting sail.
