GEORGE WHITFIELD.

He was the sixth son of Thomas and Elizabeth Whitefield, born December 16, 1714, in the city of Gloucester, the birth-place of a distinguished ments which God seems to select for the accomplishment of the exalted purpose of his will Whitfield sprang from the humblest walk in life. Whitfield's father was an inn-keeper, and at the age of fifteen, he assures us that he was engaged assisting his widowed mother in keeping a public house. At the age of twelve he was put to the grammar school, where he remained three years; and at the age of eighteen he entered Pembroke College, of the University of Oxford, where he took his bachelor's degree. Here he became acquainted with the brothers John and Charles Wesley, and through his religious associations with them, his mind became aroused to a sense of his lost condition, and he was led to exclaim, in the agony of his soul, "Why may I not trust in Christ." He did trust, and, after a struggle long and fierce, came out triumphant from the conflict, believing that he was entitled to a mansion in the Whitfield was as bold in his apostrophes as sublime in his impersonation. When preaching from the balcony of the old Court House in Philadelphia, in the midst of his discourse he exclaimed in thunder tones, looking up to heaven: "Father Abraham, who have you in heaven? Have you any Episcopalians?" The old man replied, "No" "Have you any Presbyterians?" "No." "Any Baptists?" "No." "Any Methodist, Independents, Seceders," etc. "No, no, No. We do not know such party names up here." "Who have you up there, then?" "We have only those who are Christians; those who believe in Christ." If this be the case, said the preacher, God help us to forget party names.

It is said that the celebrated historian, Hume, was an occasional listener to his sermons. On one occasion, when he was present, Whitefield, adthe rush of blood to the head and the skin quite dressing his audience, said: "The attending angel "That is true generosity," said her father.
