THE PURE IN HEART.

The fabric, soiled from daily wear, Grows clean within the housemaid's hand; Each mark of time she takes with care From seam and gusset, bem and band.

But still the stubborn stains appear, When all her handiwork is done; But says, "For this I need not fear; I've but to place it in the sun."

With faith she spreads it wide, and lo! The chemistry of golden beam Doth white this fabric as the snow, And make it pure as angel's dream.

"But," says the housemaid, in her pride, "Unless my work had been well done, The impure fabric had but dried, And never whitened in the sun."

So with our lives; 'tis ours to keep Them clean of every act impure; With finest brush of art to sweep The very dust from off the floor.

And lo! the Sun of Righteousness Into our waiting souls will stream, To brighten, beautify, and bless, And whiten to our purest dream.
