THE FLOWER UNFADING.

At morn she twined a rosy wreath, And round her brow she bound it; But ere the sun was at its height, A withered mass she found it.

She sighed that aught so beautiful In one short hour should wither; Then, meekly looking upward, said: "Unfading flowers I'll gather."

The Rose of Sharon then she sought, And wears it in her bosom; The pure aroma it exhales Dwells in no other blossom.

And daily closer to her heart She clasps the balmy treasure: Unfading through eternal years, 'Twill yield unceasing pleasure.

O ye whose earthly garlands fade! Seek, like the gentle maiden, The Rose whose beauty fadeth not, With precious perfume laden.

'Twill cheer you 'mid the glooms of time, When mortal woes are pressing; It will a soothing balm impart, And make your life a blessing.
