A Kiss in a Thunder Storm.

I rambled out, one Summer day, With Sallie, loved most dearly, Who needed but an angel's wings To be an angel really. A storm came up, the rain came down, And we a tree went under; Then most terrific grew the storm, And loudly roared the thunder.

At length there came a stunning peal, And then a flash of lightning, With terror's for a maiden's heart, My fair companion frightning. Her eyes she closed, her lips I kissed; She did not seem to wonder, Because, no doubt, the smack was not As noisy as the thunder.

The storm rolled by the years rolled on, And Sallie dear I married. And oft we speak of that wild storm, When 'neath a tree we tarried; And of the storms of life which ne'er Shall rend our hearts asunder, Nor drown the memory of that kiss,

When Sallie feared the thunder. To Tower Hall I will not make, To-day, the least allusion; The girl I kissed controls my thoughts While penning this effusion;

But in my next, (LOOK OUT FOR THAT,) I'll make my readers wonder, By facts in PROSE, which o'er the world Shall ring in tones of thunder.

The Key of the Heart.

A hardened Scottish soldier lay on his hosword of spiritual counsel from the good minister | ing, who visited him. He knew how to die without the aid of a priest," he said. The most affectionate entreaty seemed lost upon him, and he turned his face to the wall, determined to close the interview.

The minister sat down by his bed, and began to sing a hymn well known in Scotland; "O mother dear, Jerusalem, when shall I come to thee?" In a few moments the man turned himself upon his pillow, the hard look all gone, and the eye wet with a tear. "Who taught you that?" he asked. "My mother," said the minister. "And so did mine," he replied; and with these memories serging back into his soul, he was ready and willing to listen to the words of Matrimonial Candidates.

It is a custom at the Galway (Ireland) Fair for all the marriageable girls to assemble and to tempt all wanting wives, by their captivating charms, to be made more happy for life. Says an American gentleman of the highest character. who was an eye witness, and invited by a nobleman to go and see these girls: "At 12 o'clock precisely, we went, as directed, to a part of the ground higher than the rest of the field, where we found from sixty to a hundred young women, well-dressed, with good looks and good manners, and presenting a spectacle quite worthy any civil man looking at, and in which I can assure my readers there was nothing to offend any civil-or modest man's feelings. These were the marriageable girls of the country, who had come to show themselves, on the occasion, to the young men and others who wanted wives; and this was the plain and simple custom of the fair. I can plainly say that I saw in the custom no very great impropriety-it certainly did not imply that, though they were ready to be had, anybody could have them. It was not a Circassian slave market, where the richest purchaser could make his selection. They were, in no sense of the term, on sale; nor did they abandon their right of choice; but that which is done constantly in more refined society, under various covers and pretenses-at theatres, at balls and public exhibitions, I will say nothing of churches—was done by these humble and unpretending people in this straightforward manner.'
