God's Day.

Sunday was always to Willie Goodhue God's day. He never spoke of it in any other way. If his little sister asked, of a Sabbath morning, "What day is it, Willie?" He would always answer with a smile, as though he were glad. "Why, don't you know, Mamy? It is God's day.' His older brother had gone away from home on a visit; and Willie now missed him very much, was anxiously watching for his return. "Grandpa," said he, looking up from his play, "do you think Thomas will be home by next God's day?"

One Sunday, he found Mamy in a corner of the room, looking at a box of jack-straws which had been given him the day before. Willie was shocked, not because Mamy had taken his playthings, but because she had them out on Sunday. "Why, Mamy !" he exclaimed, "did you forget it was God's day?"

I wanted to know what made the child speak in this way. I thought it was beautiful, but strange, for a little fellow like him. So I called bim to my side, and asked:

"Willie, why don't you say Sunday or Sabbath day as we do?"

"Because," said he, "grandpa told me once that this was God's own day that he kept out of the week for himself. He gave us six days to work and play in; but this he kept for himself: Eternity's realms for a happier shore, and grandpa said that we must never spend a moment more than we could help for our business for, if we did, it would be stealing-stealing God's hours, you know. And so it's right to call it God's day, isn't it? I like to; and, besides, it makes me think and remember. I'm afraid I should forget sometimes, as Mamy does, if I

What Willie said made me feel ashamed of myself. I couldn't help thinking how often I hid forgotten and stolen God's precious, holy hours. May be forgive me.

SENTRY-We observe an incident that never before came under our notice, or if so had been forgotten, that "when Commodore Biddle was paying a visit to a Japanese junk in Jeddo bay, in 1846, a sentry pushed him back into his gig, as he was clambering over the bulwarks. The commodore's official wrath was kindled; he returned to his ship and sent a peremptory demand for an apology and indemnity for the insult. The reply was returned as speedily as the circumstances would admit that the sentry had acted without orders, but that his head, which had been already out off, was at the commodere's service.

This was certainly manifesting a most accommodating disposition, and was all that "could be expected under the circumstances."

Destiny.

There oft' seems a destiny urging us on To the pathways in life that we tread, I fate on whose bosom our spirits have flown, A stream whose deep waters rush on to the bourne Where our hopes lie withered and dead.

There is surely a will that is greater than ours, A spirit that we cannot restrain, A hand that oft crushes hope's smiling young

A heart that will wither the sweetest love bowers. Nor bring back their beauty again.

And that fate is embodied, for seldom is seen A smile on the sad, gloomy brow, No flowerets are there, no leaflets of green; We sigh as we think of the joy that has been,

Some bright spots there are 'mid the gloom of the past,

And the misery that waits on us now.

Yet little they bring us of cheer, The present is dark, to the future at last, We look for some comfort, it too has been cast In the same leaden hue of despair.

Then sick of our bondage we'd gladly give o'er The chains so unwillingly ours. And, weary of life, in death would explore And Heaven for its loveliest flowers.
