He accordingly paid his addresses to Miss Gamble. After some months' attention he asked her hand in marriage. She

This reply to Wirt was as unexpected as it was novel. His reply was that he reguded that proposition as a bar to all further consideration of the subject, and he left her. Her course towards him was the same as ever-his, resentment and neglect.

In the course of a few weeks, he went again and solicited her hand. But her reply was that her mind was made up. He became indignant and regarded the terms as insulting to his honor, and avowed it should be the last meeting they should ever have. He took to drinking worse, and seemed to run headlong to ruin.

One day, while lying on the ontskirts of the city near a little grocery or grog shop, a young lady, whom it is not necessary to name, was passing that way to her home, not far off, and beheld him with his face upwards to the scorching sun. She took her handkerehief, with the name marked upon it, and placed it over his this on my face?" No one knew. He dropped the glass, exclaiming.

"Enough! Enough!"

He retired instantly from the store forgetting his thirst, but not his debauch, the handkerchief, or the lady, vowing, that, if God gave him strength, never to touch, taste or handle intoxicating drinks.

To meet Miss Gamble was the hardest effort of his life. If he met her in her carriage, or on foot, he popped around the nearest corner.

She at last addressed him a note under her own hand, inviting him to her house, which he finally gathered courage enough to accept. He told her if she still bore affection to him he would agree to her own terms. Her reply was:

"My conditions are the same now that they have been."

"Then," said Wirt, "I except them." They soon married; from that day he kept his word, and his affairs brightened while honor and glory gathered thick upon his brow. His name has been enrolled high in the temple of fame; while patriotism and renown live after him with imperishable luster.
