and ghastly wounds were given both to those who fell and to those who stood up. At length the Cooleens retreated to the river's brink, where many were driven in and drowned. Several attempted to escape by awimming, but were still barbarously pelted by the victorious Lawlors. It was full tide, and two sand boats on the shore were afloat, into which numbers of the de feated party crowded, and pushed off across the ferry, but being overladen they sonk, and all on board perished. Four bodies were found next morning at the ferry, and twelve others, men and women, have since been taken up in other parts of the river. It is not yet accurately known how many have been sacrificed, either on shore or in the melancholy noyades that followed, but 8 or 10 lay dead on the strand of battle at the northern side of the river, and then friends on the southern dare not venture across to remove them. It was expected that another savage conflict (of retulation) would take place on Wednesday, when the last account came from Tralee.

Popular Out-breuk at Carrick on Suir. are pained to learn by letters from Carrick-on-sur, that the same feelings erinced itself in that town on Monday, which prevailed here and elsewhere last week. The starving pepulation—the victims of the times-rose en masse, paraded the streets. rung the bells of the churches, &c. and threatened an attack on the corn stores We are happy to state that nothing of se rious moment was the consequence, though many of the poor creatures said that they were fasting for two days. They were re monstrated with, and the gentry and clergy and other inhabitants who feel for the aretched poor, are about to devise plans to save them from the ravages of famine. To what a meserable state is not this country reduced? We live in the midst of plenty our anays and stores are crowded with provisione; our fields teem with luxuriance and yet are the people starving. But such a state of things cannot exist much longer: and the sooner a speedy termination shall he put to it the better for all parties,

The elections were regarded as settled in Paris. The results had, towards the conlunon of the struggle, been more favour the for the Opposition than in the comand patriotic Arago returned for two dis ets, and the impetuous Colonel Brieque wile elected for Cherbourg. Moreover M. M. Lafitte, Arago, Odnilon Burrot, Cor neum, and De Tracy, had been returned by eleven colleges; six additional Opposition Dopanes would consequently be chosen for the places which they must decline. Ne vertheless the force of the Ministry would remain to the full as overwhelming as has been anticipated from the out-ot.

Let Congress take core of the Rich, un he Rich will take care of the Poor.

This is a pretended quitation fro each or writing of Mr. Webster, which he Jackson papers have been harping up-or months. But it has been repeated onounced, and we now pronounce it a fab Acation. Mr. Webster never mad such remark-perer entertained ons a sentiment. The Jackson editors are alleaged to produce it in any thing he ev restored or wrote. And if they cannot est, what degree of infamy attaches to the h who could deliberately and felsely stribute to him such a settment, for the purpose of starring up the projections of a person of the people against him.

A recent dispute has taken place in Portst, between the Argus and Evening Ad tiser, as to the fact whether or not Mr. buer ever made use of the assertion Let Congress take care of the Rich, and Rich will take care of the Poor." ere should be no further doubt upon the bject, a note was addressed to Mr. Web fer to which the following is a reply :

Is streamed sisters. In short, Mr. H. was apparently in his sphere, as near what a man should be, as is found in this imperiest state of being. But were this notice to stop here gloomy indeed would be the picture! Melancholy the prespect! So much goodness, so much private worth, such excellence of moral character, sunk in a moraless night! Can such vertice die! There is a star of hope, that shines fair and cle. Tarrid the storm of death, that throws its illuminating beams on the wirkness of the tomb. A star like that which guided the wise men, directs to the Babe of Bethlehem. On this he fixed his eye, on it he looked with an unwavering confidence in the bour of death, that dark, that honest hour which tries the hearts of men. Mr. H, for the last few years of his short his had been an active, consistent am influential member of the presbyterian church, and his dying experience proves that he knew full well an whom he had believed—his holy life, his calm compessue, and resignation when about to meet the last chemy which is death, testify louding favor of the prevent of that redigion which cometh down from heaven. The church has lost an efficient transfer, the community a good citizen, his numerous frends a companion whom they dearly loved—but who can give language to the feelings of a mothers, brethers, sisters heart! But there is a rest which remained for the people of God a world where larewell is never heard, there his spirit is gone, and while his loody lies in the tomb.
