

POBTRY

THE CROWDED STREET.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Let me move slowly through the street, Filled with an evershifting train, Amid the sound of steps that beat The murmuring walks like summer rain.

How fast the flitting figures come! The mild, the fierce, the stony face; Some bright with thoughtless smiles, and some Where some secret tears have left their trace.

They pass to toil, to strife, to rest; To halls in which the feast is spread; To chambers where the funeral guest In silence sits beside the dead.

And some to happy homes repair, Where children, pressing check to cheek, Where mute caresses shall declare The tenderness they cannot speak.

And some, who walk in calmness here, Shall shudder as they reach the door Where one who made their dwelling dear, Its flower, its light, is seen no more.

Youth, with pale cheek and slender frame, And dreams of greatness in thine eye! Goest thou to build an early name, Or early in the task to die?

Keen son of trade, with eager brow? Who is now fluttering in thy snare? Thy golden fortunes, tower they now, Or melt the glittering spires in air!

Who of this crowd, to-night, shall tread The dance till daylight gleams again? Who sorrow o'er the untimely dead? Who writhe in throes of mortal pain?

Some, famine-stuck, shall think how long The cold dark hours, how slow the light! And some, who flaunt amid the throng, Shall hide in dens of shame to-night.

Each, where his tasks or pleasures call, They pass, and heed each other not. There is who heads, who holds them all, In His large love and boundless thought.

These struggling tides of life that seem In wayward, aimless course to tend, Are eddles of the mighty stream That rolls to its predestiona end.

From the Temperance Advocate.

HISTORY OF A COUNTRY VILLAGE. THIS STORY IS LITERALLY TRUE.

Something more than twenty years since, I visimy brethren, most of the distinguished gendemen Judges, who had resided for a few years previously | village in which he lived and died. in the place-to Dr. S. one of the most skilful and scientific surgeons, who had ever sot down to a old and young-to the Merchants and Officers of the Court. Although the intersperate practices of my own village were bad enough in all conscience, I was somewhat startled at the excess towhich they were carried in this little country town. It was rare to find one of my new acquaintances sober in the day time-some few kept moderately so-at might, there was no exception. A private sitting room adjoined my bedchamber, which was filled every evening by a set of the hardest drinkers I have ever met before or since. They were all gentlemen however, of high character in their professional and official standing. I have been an occasional visitor to this little village every year since I made my debut there, and am well informed as to its history. 1 propose to sketch it as an example of what one man can do towards destroying the merals of a whole community-of the lasting effects of a bad example set by a distinguished man. The Temperance Reform has reached the village-there are few if any drunkarks there now; but terrible has been the fate of many of my old acquaintances.

Judge P. was an honest man-of distinguished ability as a lawyer—of easy and affable manners; den he came to an abrupt pause of some few moand of great independence of character and action. When the Judge first moved to our little village, it was no ways remarkable for the intemperate habits of its inhabitants-though, as every body drank at that day, it is probable there were few tetotalers .-He was a bachelor, fond of shooting-fond of hunting, fond of racing, fond of card playing, and above all, fond of dram drinking. He loved company, and found plenty of willing associates.

declaimer against hypocrisy. "My rule is," he 26th instaut, (Wednesday of the ensuing county would say, "whatever I choose to do, I do openly; court.) I abhor hyporrisy, and despise a hypocrite." Every day in vacation time, when not engaged in his other sports, his Honor might be found in the front piazza of the Tavern at which he boarded, playing at cards, with his bottle of whiskey upon the table. The young Lawyers were his especial associates. Who should dare rebuke a Judge, or question the propriety of his conduct. The example was contagious—few, alas! very few, escaped a. Drinken-ness was the fashion—the females winked at it—the sober were mute—the religious were silent—the high Priest of these bachanalian orgies triumphed over public opinion, and bound the whole community in his chains. The Judge at length died-died as he had lived for many years, a drunkard. A young Lawyer—the son of one of the most distinguished men in the State, who had been a favorite pet of the Judge's, qualified as his executor. For a few years the Lawyer tollowed the rumous practices he had acquired from the Judge. He got no practice, for he was incapable of attending to it, and hyed on his Patron's estate. The legatees at last claimed an account of the Executor. Except the habit of drinking, he was a noble hearted fellow, and could not bear dishonor. One night an alarm was a resident of this State; It is therefore ordered, that given that young H. was dying. His drunken friend, Dr. S., was called in to administer to him. What is the matter, asked Dr. S. of H., who was defendant to be and appear at our next Court of still sensible. H. pointed to a decanter. Druk, muttered S., won't die this time I guess. I will though, the County of Ashe, at the Court House in Jefferson. said H., speaking distinctly. I won't live, disgraced on the fourth Monday of May next, then and there as I am. H. was dying from poison. Before morning, in spite of all could be done, the unhappy suicide was no more. Some short time after this, the report of a pistol was heard in the store of one of the leading merchants in the village-the neighbors rushed in to find the merchant a lifeless corpse. He had shot himself in a fit of mania a potu. The Doctor publicly avowed his intention of airling himself by hard drink. He said he was weary of livingand he kept his word. It too a long spell to conquer his iron constitution, but he succeeded and died drunk. There were several a mer deaths near about the same time, and from the same cause—a Lawyer who had been a gallant other in the last war-a once respectable mechanic, and another merchant

In fact, the Judge's old associates and intimates died off very fast, but the practices engendered by his example did not abute. The village was thought to be a fine location for a Lawyer, and several came in to fill up the ranks of the profession. Among others was Tom D, admitted by every body to be one of the finest intellects in the State. His debut was crowned with the most eminent success that ever fell to a young lawyer's commencement of the practice. His practice at once was large and very lucrative. I did not chance to make his acquaintance for about two yeas after his settling in the village. He was then at the head of his profession on an extensive circuit. How he was getting along otherwise, may be inferred from the answer of a valued friend of mine, who saw him on business a day or two before. How is Tom doing, D.? I asked. Do you think him really the Lawyer he is represented to be on his circuit? I have no doubt of it, said my friend. I have not met his equal, of his age, in my whole life-but mark my words, his career will be a brandy in the time. My triend's prediction was til compelled by law verified. Drunkenness was the prevailing vice of the village, and the distinguished lawyer could not Mecklenburg Co., Oct. 15, 1842. resist his own appetite and the deleterious influences by which he was surrounded. He sunk in public estimation almost as fast as he had risen in it, and a very few years closed the brilliant destiny of this highly gifted man. His body was found in a river which he had occasion to ford. Whether it was the act of voluntary suicide or the accident of a drunkeu man which produced his death will never be known until the day when all the secrets shall be made known.

There was another in the village, respectable, popular and esteemed-a member of the Legislature, of the last we have named. He was a constant deding for several years been engaged in keeping Privotee at the same unholy shrine-a victim of Judge vate Entertainment at Mount Mourne in Iredell whose profound knowledge of his profession, splendid talents and captivating eloquence, ensured him success wherever he might select his field of action. He had lived in the low country until about forty years of age, and never hesitated to avow, he had sought the upper country for a residence, with the view and hope of correcting the bad habits he had fallen into. He was a gentleman when sober. I never saw him otherwise, but from all accounts, a most loathsome animal when drunk.

His hope, however, was vain-the fiend had him too fully in his power. He struggled and fell and strove again and again, to redeem himself. Returning from his circuit, where, instead of attending to his business, he had constantly been drunk, he reached our country village in the last stage of exhaustion. Neither medicine nor brandy could revive him, and he died. His friend, the member, paid him every attention, and had him decently buried .-Whilst attending to the digging of the grave, which was being done by an Irishman, Pat, half jokingly and half seriously said, " suppose, Squire, whilst my hand is in, I dig two of them. It won't be long be-fore you'll want your's for the same reason that's brought the Lawyer here, and I'm thinking it won't spoil before you'll use it." The young gentleman was highly indignant and disgusted at the Irishman's coarseness and want of delicacy, and averred that he never drank to hurt him in his whole life It was a fatal, though common and perhaps natural delusion. Two weeks from that day, the Irishman's prediction was verified. He filled a drunkard's grave by the side of his more distinguished friend.

The location of this most true and tragical history will doubtless be identified by many-and I beg leave to disclaim any intentional disrespect to the ted a country village in another State, with the view living or the dead, in having condensed it, and of attending one of their Courts. I had but recent-ly been admitted to the Bar—but being a Lawyer, had the opportunity of making the acquaintance of and to show to what a fearful extent the influence ot a single individual may reach. For more than of the village, and the principal visitors. I was in fifteen years after his death, Judge P's, opinion controduced to Judge P. one of the Superior Court | tinued fatally to influence the habits of the country

He will no doubt try to pass as a free unable to attend through a sudden indisposition .-The Colonel instanty ascended to the drum-pulpit, commanded attention, assumed a reverental attitude, and burst forth in a strain of the most impassioned eloquence.
