The Flower Spirit. BY CHARLES BY ALV.

When earth was in its golden grime Ere grief or gloom had maje a its hue. And Paradise, unknown to crime, Beneath the love of angels grow; Each flower was then a spirit's home, Each tree a living shrine of serie; And, sh.! that ever hearts could room,

Could quit for sin that se raph throng ! But there the spirit lingers yet,

Though dimness o'er our visions fall ; And flowers that seem with dew-drops well Weep angel tears for human thrall; and sentiments and feelings move The weal, like orecles carine ; and hearts that ever how'd to live. First found it by the flower's sweet sharm miceless cloquence and power, language that hath in life no seund, Still haunts, like Truth, the spirit flower, And ballows even Serrew's ground in wanderer gives it Memory's fear,

Whilst home seems pictured on its less; and hopes, and hearts, and voices dear, Come o'er him-beautiful as brief.

To not the bloom, though wild or rore, It is the spirit power within, Which malts and moves our souls, to share, The Paradise, we here might win. Far heaven strelf around us lies,

And we are watch'd by angels' eyes, With hope and faith still fond. will believe a spirit dwells
