DEATH.

Death steals on man with noiseless tread; No plan, no power, no voice to plead...

your love! Does the babe in your arms never see your upward glance of devotion? Can it hear your name, and are you falling to teach it that of Jesus? Can it make known to you its wants and wishes in childish words...

Agricultural.

DEEP CULTIVATION.

Deep ploughing turns the drought itself to good account, and renders mulching and irrigation comparatively needless, or, if used, more efficacious. During a dry spell and in trenched ground, roots strike deeper in search of food and moisture, become more extensively ramified, and sooner find the rich loam and manure intermingled deeply with the soil.

The wet season is also a blessing to the deep cultivator. The more rain, the more heat, ammonia, carbonic acid and other organic elements are left in the soil as it descends. As each drop filters through, it is succeeded by another, or by air, both essential to vegetation; and to dissolve, act on or combine with the inorganic elements of the soil.

The farmer often speaks of his "cold, wet land." No variety of soil, in any location, is of itself colder than another. The very water, which trenching, draining, &c., allows to pass off, after imparting its virtues to the soil, if retained on or near the surface by hard, impervious subsoil, becomes itself, by its change, the source of the coldness complained of.

It is a common error to suppose that the soil is cooled by the evaporation of water. The evaporation of a pound of water requires about 1,000 degrees of heat, some authors stating it at less and others more, or it requires one hundred pounds of air to degrees. This is reversing the experiment of Professor Johnson, in Epy's "Book of Storms," where he says, "a pound of vapor, condensed to water," would heat 100 pounds of air about 35 degrees.

It cannot play—I have never prayed, my mother never taught me,—was the reply of one who surprised of an and of his need of a saviour, was urged to seek himself in prayer for God. Her mother was a professed Christian, and her son grown to manhood, had embraced spiritual opinions—his mother was brought before him and said to him, "I was intelligent, amiable and refined, yet never in my spiritual world there loomed Egyptian darkness. To him there was no Long Father, no Redeemer, no saviour, to meet the needs of his spirit's yearnings. Before him arose no bright mansions, eternal and glorious, to which he must aspire. Doubt-plagued by the supposition of those near to him that his mother could not be reached, that she would never be more than the faintly shining light of the unenlightened."

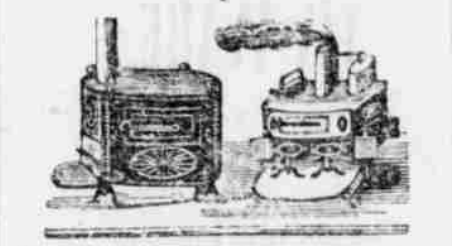

the striped bug. The vines had commenced running, and in two or three days the bugs had stripped nearly every leaf. As a desperate remedy, we applied a handful of guano on the top of the hill as far as the vines had run, taking care that it did not fall on the leaf. In twenty-four hours not a bug was to be seen; the vines had assumed a healthy and vigorous growth, and are now loaded with fruit. The experiment was not on one vine only, but hundreds.—Western Agriculturalist, Oct. 10.

SMALL FARMS.

We desire to impress on the common-sense reasoning of every man, the paramount importance of having no more land in culture than can be well cultivated. By no means attempt to manage more than you can manage well. Be a farmer, not a mere earth scraper, lazy scratching up sufficient earth to destroy the face of the soil, and throw seed away, or you will always have to scratch hard for a living. But make your farm a source of pride, and it will surely become a source of profit. Make the object to be not to have many, but rich acres.

Farmers, make a proper use of your time, and remember that when it is once gone it can never be recalled.
