Country Merchants

ARE respectfully invited to call and examine

Poetry.

Oh! I've heard a gentle mother,

As the twilight hours began,

Pleading with a son of duty,

As he went to the wars.

But she was too late to say,

Though with love's words quite as ready

Points she out this other duty.

"Stirre, my dear, to be a lady!"

What's a lady? Is it something

Made of hopes and sighs, and ains,

Used to decorate the pillow,

Like the fancy rags and chains?

Or is it one who wears an honest

Every feeling that is human?

Is 'tis this to be a lady,

That is this to be a woman?

Mother, then, unto your daughter,

Speak of something higher, fit,

Than to be mere fashion's lady—

"Woman," is the brighter star,

It is, in your strong affection,

Urging your son to be a true man,

Urging your daughter to be strong

To strive and be a woman.

Yes, a woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

Where the mind and soul, and more,

Bloom to work out life's great duty—

It is woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

Where the mind and soul, and more,

Bloom to work out life's great duty.

There's no brighter, kinder woman.

Be a woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

Where the mind and soul, and more,

Bloom to work out life's great duty.

There's no brighter, kinder woman.

Be a woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

Where the mind and soul, and more,

Bloom to work out life's great duty.

There's no brighter, kinder woman.

Be a woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

Where the mind and soul, and more,

Bloom to work out life's great duty.

There's no brighter, kinder woman.

Be a woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

Where the mind and soul, and more,

Bloom to work out life's great duty.

There's no brighter, kinder woman.

Be a woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

Where the mind and soul, and more,

Bloom to work out life's great duty.

There's no brighter, kinder woman.

Be a woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

Where the mind and soul, and more,

Bloom to work out life's great duty.

There's no brighter, kinder woman.

Be a woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

Where the mind and soul, and more,

Bloom to work out life's great duty.

There's no brighter, kinder woman.

Be a woman—brightest jewel

Of that high and perfect beauty,

written on colored tissue paper, and some were in that easy, flowing hand that speaks energy and refinement of character in the calligrapher.

"Oh, how I should like to read these letters!" said I involuntarily.

"That is what all the ladies say. It would be almost impossible to preserve our charge from the curiosity of the female sex, if fortunately our rules did not protect us from many visitors."

"But do you never read them?"

"Never, unless they seem very important, or contain inclosures of amount. It is all we can do to keep up with the arrival of the dead mails now. If we were to read one letter in a hundred, we should be lamentably behind hand; besides the privacy of these letters is a point of honor with us. We have no more right to read them here, unless it is necessary, than to pry into any personal secrets."

Here one of the clerks leaned over, and handed our companion a tiny package.

"From one of the letters," he said—"I thought the lady might be interested in it."

It was a single card of golden hair tied with a bit of pink ribbon, and wrapped in a piece of paper, on which was written "Baby's hair!"

I knew the history of the letter in an instant, but I had never looked on its folds.

I could see the fair young mother peering the sunny tress from the infant head, and placing it with half a smile and half a tear, within the closely written page that was to glad the heart of the far-away husband.

And he never received the letter. Perhaps he died under the mighty shadow of Sierra

Nevada; perhaps the turf of some Mississippi valley lay cold and close on his pale-less breast, while she, the faithful wife, was growing more sad, less hopeful with every day that brought no answering word.

"I could not bear that the bright curl should be thrown carelessly among the host of letters; it seemed like desecration."

"May I keep this little lock?"

"Certainly, if you like."

"And I placed it carefully in my reticule, with tender hands. I knew not where the sorrowing young mother's heart was breaking, day by day, but certain I am that there is an invisible bond of sympathy between her
