

Sunday Reading.

THE EARLY DAYS OF CHRISTIANITY...

In the early days of Christianity, when to confess Christ drew upon the disciple persecution and shame...

There was everything to lose, so the unbeliever might argue there was everything to gain...

Looking abroad upon the world with obedient eyes, one cannot fail to perceive how small a check upon man's baser passions is this public profession of discipleship in Christ...

"I know you will congratulate me," said a gentleman to a clerical friend; "I believe I am a converted man."

Trid by the rule of strict justice in monetary affairs only, how many characters in the numberless host that approach the table of our Lord can bear the sternest impressions of an all-seeing God?

But for this outward restraint these hearts would probably plunge deeper into the abyss of guilt...

Before whom do we confess Christ? God who leaves our hearts to the judge of our sincerity...

Let each and all resolve to wear no hypocrisy so that at least the conscience sin of hypocrisy may be unconsumed...

There is a heavy obligation resting upon those who confess Christ, and it cannot be left to sleep...

THE EVERLASTING BURDEN. Said Hakkon when he was a great lover of slaves...

DEEP CULTIVATION. Hoop narrates the following tale: A husband and wife are desirous that their two sons should continue in business...

not be likely to pay much regard to an old law. What, then, did the upright radi do? He added his ass, tied a large sack about his neck...

Permit me, O Caliph, to fill this sack with some of the earth upon which I am now standing.

Among as confession is the rule and not the exception, and the facility with which it is accomplished is a shame...
