Poetry.

BY JOHN QUAKER.

Of all the amusements of the mind,

From logic down to fiction,

There isn't one that you can find

So very cheap as writing!

A very cheap diversion,

If we but rightly use it,

And not, as we are apt to do,

Force it on our friends.

I wish—a common wish indeed—

My purse was something better,

With I might cheer the child of need,

And not my pen to flatter;

That I might make oppression feel,

As every golden mine it is;

And break the tyrant's rod of steel,

As only gold can break it.

I wish that I might be a poet,

And every human passion

That beats in mortal veins,

With I might cheer the child of need,

And not my pen to flatter;

That I might make oppression feel,

As every golden mine it is;

And break the tyrant's rod of steel,

As only gold can break it.

I wish that I might be a poet,

And every human passion

That beats in mortal veins,

With I might cheer the child of need,

And not my pen to flatter;

That I might make oppression feel,

As every golden mine it is;

And break the tyrant's rod of steel,

As only gold can break it.

I wish that I might be a poet,

And every human passion

That beats in mortal veins,

With I might cheer the child of need,

And not my pen to flatter;

That I might make oppression feel,

As every golden mine it is;

And break the tyrant's rod of steel,

As only gold can break it.

I wish that I might be a poet,

And every human passion

That beats in mortal veins,

With I might cheer the child of need,

And not my pen to flatter;

That I might make oppression feel,
