

THE GLEANER.

GRAHAM, N. C., AUGUST 10, 1875.
Local, State and General.
W. T. JOHNSON, EDITOR.

Mr. John C. Robertson, of Company Shops, is our authorized agent to receive subscriptions, and receipt for the same.

We learn that during the late heavy rains, a portion of the dam across Haw River at Big Falls washed away.

J. E. Boyd, radical, is elected in this county as delegate to Convention, by 88 majority over E. S. Parker, democrat.

We were pleased to receive a visit on Friday last, from Rev. Mr. Michaux, editor of the Central Protestant. He is an able editor, as his paper verifies.

Election day in Graham passed off quietly. We failed to hear of any disturbance, or of any unpleasant words being exchanged between the rival parties. The white people as a general thing, and we believe it was the case for the most part of the colored, voted and went about their business. There was less noise and confusion around the polls than is usual on such occasions.

The following is the official vote of Alamance county, for delegate to the Constitutional Convention:

DEATH OF THOMAS DEWEY.

[Charlotte Observer] "The Angel of Death spreads his wing on the blast."

A thrill of horror and astonishment ran through Charlotte yesterday morning, when the news flashed over the city of Charlotte that Thomas W. Dewey, Cashier of the Bank of Mecklenburg, was dead! So sudden, so entirely unexpected was the announcement, that the report was hardly credited when told the first time, and the shock was mingled with incredulity. In a short time the unwelcome news had spread from one end of the city to the other, and was on the lips of everybody.

Mr. Dewey had been slightly unwell for a few days, but nothing serious was apprehended. At 11 o'clock on Tuesday night, he complained of restlessness and an inability to sleep, and sent for a physician, who administered a small dose of morphia. At 1 o'clock he was more comfortable, reclining on a lounge in his chamber. His family retired, leaving him as they thought, quiet for the night. At 5 o'clock in the morning Mrs. Dewey awoke and found him still lying on the lounge; she went to him and found him lifeless. Every effort that science could suggest was used to resuscitate him but to no effect. The opinion of his physicians are that he died from apoplexy.

Mr. Dewey moved from Raleigh, N. C. to this city twenty-two years ago. He was Cashier of the Bank of North Carolina from the date of its organization at this place until after the war. In 1865 he was elected Cashier of the First National Bank of Charlotte, which position he filled until 1868, when he organized the Banking House of Thos. W. Dewey & Co., afterwards Tate & Dewey, of which firms he was Cashier and principal business manager. At the organization of the Bank of Mecklenburg he was elected Cashier and held this position till the date of his death.

Mr. Dewey was one of Charlotte's most liberal minded and public spirited citizens. Every enterprise ever started in the city received from him a most liberal encouragement. As a banking officer and accountant he had no superior in the State. Possessed of a brilliant mind, well cultivated, a genius disposition, he was a charm to the social circle. The bankers, merchants and business men of Charlotte, stop to shed a silent tear to his memory.

As a member of the Masonic fraternity he stood high. At the date of his death he was Treasurer of the Masonic Temple Association, Past Master of Phalanx Lodge, High Priest of Charlotte Chapter No. 39, Grand High Priest of the State of North Carolina and Generalissimo in Commandery No. 2, at Charlotte.

He was 48 years of age. We feel ourselves incapable of doing justice to the memory of the man o-whom we write, and will leave the task to an abler and more eloquent pen. His many noble qualities are enshrined in the hearts of his fellow citizens in more enduring form than if emblazoned on granite or marble, and though now the "silver cord be loosed and the golden bowl be broken, and the pitcher broken at the fountain, and the wheel broken at the cistern," his memory will ever live in the hearts of legions of friends, and his nobility of character and unsullied name will remain long after his body shall have returned to the dust from which it was taken.

At a regular meeting of the Board of County Commissioners, of Alamance county, held on the first Monday in this month, the following resolutions of respect to the late Dr. F. R. Freeman, were adopted. Whereas, it hath pleased an All Wise Providence to remove from our midst since the last regular meeting of this Board, our much esteemed fellow-citizen, Dr. F. R. Freeman; Therefore be it.

Resolved, That in the death of Dr. Freeman the Board of County Commissioners of Alamance county has lost a worthy and faithful member, and the county of Alamance one of its most esteemed and upright citizens.

Resolved, further, That in respect to his name and memory that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, and a copy furnished the family of the deceased, and that a copy be furnished the ALAMANCE GLEANER, with a request that it be published.

J. S. Vincent, Chairman.

Mr. Ed. F. Small, the popular photographer, will pitch his tent on the court house yard, court week, and afford to those wanting pictures of themselves and families an opportunity of getting them. His work is sufficient evidence as to his qualification as being a good photographer, and he can go found at Big Falls Factory, where he is doing a lively business.

DEATH OF ANDREW JOHNSON.

The telegraph brought on Saturday last the unexpected announcement of the death of one who had for many years occupied a conspicuous position in American history, and who has been snatched away at a time when, to human view, his capacities for usefulness to his country were about to be most signally tested. Andrew Johnson was born in Raleigh, N. C. on the 29th of December 1808. At the age of ten he was bound apprentice to a tailor, the poverty of his mother making it necessary that this early in life he should become dependent upon his own labor. This same circumstance shut him out from all early advantages of education, and he never attended school a day in his life. But his ambition to learn to read was excited by a gentleman of Raleigh who was in the habit of going to the tailor to get the fitting of the apprentices. From this impulse Johnson took up the alphabet without an instructor and by steady application at night learned to read.

In 1824 he moved to Laurens C. H. in South Carolina, but after ten years returned to Raleigh, but after a short stay, went to Greenville, Tenn. He was elected to the Legislature of that State in 1835, and thence his political rise was rapid. In 1849 he was elected on the Democratic ticket for the State at large. He was first elected to Congress in 1845 and remained in that body by successive elections until 1853. In that year he was elected Governor of Tennessee over Gustavus A. Henry and again in 1855 over Meredith P. Gentry. In 1857 he was elected U. S. Senator for a full term ending on March, 1863.

In the late war he took sides with the North, and in 1864 was put on the ticket with Abraham Lincoln, for Vice-President, and on the death of Mr. Lincoln, in April 1865, became President of the United States. Here the most momentous period of his history begins, and to which we can only briefly refer. The new President seemed to have been actuated by a sincere reverence to the Constitution as it existed before the war. His radical ideas and practices of those whose regard for constitution and civil law had been destroyed or depraved by the license of war brought him in collision with the dominant party in Congress, resulting in the first impeachment known to the Presidential office, and ending both in his acquittal and in the rupture of all ties with the party to which he had belonged. And the antagonism of Mr. Johnson to the section which gave him birth, and his schemes of reconstructing the States, recently in the grasp of the cruel and unjust yoke of slavery, left him without friends at the South, and he left the Presidential chair, without party affiliations and with few friends anywhere. He stood isolated, excommunicated from all, his only ally being his sturdy and courageous defence, and he believed to be the true principles of the Constitution.

In his retirement his restless and ambitious nature sought employment in the politics of Tennessee, and he was elected to a term of six years to the United States Senate in 1874, taking his seat as a member of that body on March 4th 1875.

Much was expected from him, elected as an independent. His views were supposed to be enlarged by his wide experience, his veneration for the Constitution strengthened by his struggles in its defence, and his moderation increased by the severe trials of his fortitude and forbearance.

At a time when the country needed most urgently a return to the National Councils of men revering the Constitution, learned in its construction, and with views enlarged and liberalized by the most varied experience, Mr. Johnson's election was a victory to the country as the harbinger of a brighter day for the Senate and a better day for the country. His new career was abruptly terminated that time was not given for the realization of the many expectations based upon his election.

Mr. Johnson's peculiar relations to parties during the last years of his life left him isolated as a period of political existence when most men are restrained by the strongest partisanship, and he passed away, the only example of an American President impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, and the only one who in his retirement was left alone without friends, sympathizers or partisans, but who extorted respect by the purity of his character, and the honesty of an administration which left no taint of corruption upon his hands—an administration which it was hoped might, by his experience, be used in his position, as Senator, as an example for a reform now so much needed in public affairs.—News.
