Court Still on First Case on Calendar.

The Special Term of Court opened Monday morning upon the arrival of Judge J. Crawford Biggs, the Judge presiding. By order of the Judge at last September Term the case of Holt, Gant & Holt Cotton Mfg. Co.
vs. Hub Milling Co. was set for the first case for trial at the next regular or special term of Alamance Superior Court. Accordingly this case headed calendar and was taken up at once upon the convening of court Monday. The suit is between two corporations owning water powers about a half-mile apart in Morton township on Haw River. The former is a cotton mill up-stream and the latter a merchant flour and gristmill down-stream. The contention between the litigants involves water rights and claims for damages. The parties are represented by some of the State's ablest legal talent—Mess.
C. W. Tillett of Charlotte, W. H.
Carroll of Burlington and E. S.
Perker, Jr., of Graham, for plaintiff, and Judges W. P. Bynum, Jr., and Col. C. Strudwick of Greensboro and Col. J. A. Long of Graham. A large number of witnesses have been examined and the ablest attorneys have stubbornly contested every inch of the ground covered. It was not until this morning that argument to the jury began and will not be concluded till tomorrow. No such legal battle has been witnessed in Alamance for years and the argument of counsel has been strong and learned.

The Sins of the Father.

The subject of "The Sins of the Father" is so big and vital—so imminent and pressing upon the people of the South—that Thos.
Dixon did not wait to put it into a novel, but attacked it directly by means of this play. He had a message to speak concerning racial purity, and he has spoken it without delaying or flinching.
It comes, in Mr. Dixon's own words, as a clarion call to the South to be true to her best traditions and save American civilization. A book amuses and interests, but a play drives a message home with incomparably greater power. Those who would witness the thrilling story Mr.
Dixon has put in dramatic guise and would learn the nature of his extraordinary message, will have their opportunity at the Mont-white Theatre, Jan. 19.
