Five Veterans Of Battle Of Vicksburg

to be For The Real Thing.

Pewee Valley, Ky.—Through the courtesy of Col. Fred Levy, the veterans of the Confederate Home were guests to see that wonderful film, "The Crisis."

Through the columns of your paper the veterans wish to extend their most grateful thanks and express their high appreciation of this privilege.

We were treated as distinguished guests several rows of seats near the stage were reserved for us, where we could see and hear, and in spirit take part again in the scenes so accurately reproduced in the big 12-reel picture.

Five of the veterans who were present had been in the battle of Vicksburg, and when that event was so vividly portrayed those men arose as one and stretched forward as if they wanted again to jump right into the fray.

"Sit down Bill," said one of the vets behind. "No, I won't; I was right there and I ain't going to miss a thing of it. I'm going to see it right through." And he forgot all else but the fighting "he was doing." With grateful thanks, Veterans In The Home.

This big production will be shown at the Mexican, matinee and night, June 13.

New York City Preparing Against Return of Infantile Paralysis.

In order to ward off another epidemic of poliomyelitis or infantile paralysis in New York City this summer, the city is bestirring itself to the point of adopting almost every feasible means of disease prevention, particularly as it affects the children's health.

Since the manner of spread of infantile paralysis is not yet known, the city is willing to take no responsibility in failing to safeguard every avenue of infection against a recurrent epidemic of the disease.

Consequently many movements are now afoot not only to guard against this particular disease but to protect children's health as far as possible during the summer months.

That decayed teeth may act as an avenue of "polio" infection has been suggested to the health department of New York by Dr. Louis Fischer. He says: "The border line between mouth, i. e., teeth, and throat, is too important to overlook as a possible point of entrance of the infection."

Dr. Fischer's suggestion will be acted upon by the city health department and a campaign against decayed teeth will soon be set in motion.

As a result of such precautions even after the outbreak of infantile paralysis last summer, it is a significant fact that there were actually 1,052 fewer deaths of babies under one year of age in New York City in 1916 than in 1915, and there were actually 321 fewer deaths of children under five years of age in 1916 than in 1915.

In fact, despite the outbreak of infantile paralysis, the death rates of children under one year of age and under five years of age were lower last year than ever before in the history of the city.
