One of the main reasons why the various root crops, such as beets, carrots, ruta-bagas and turnips, are not more generally grown in this country is that as a rule they are planted for winter use much too early. The result, even if a big crop is obtained, is a supply of roots that by digging time have become so old, tough and pithy that no amount of cook-

When to Plant.

The reasons why late planted roots are superior in quality are that they usually strike a more favorable period for continuous rapid growth, which always means better table qualities; and because better table qualities; and because it is the nature of these vegetables to develop, as they reach full ma-turity, a tough fiberous, interior growth of tissue designed to help support the tall seed stalk which is to be thrown up. When they is to be thrown up. reach this stage—as they too often are allowed to do before being stored for winter-they are of lit-

the use for the table.

The root crop vegetables most valuable for winter use are: beets, carrots, turnips and ruta-bagas. Any of these, if planted now, will attain good size by time for storing, as they continue to grow until killing frosts, making the most rapid development during the noist weather and cool nights of late summer and early fall.

Ruta-bagas take longer to develop than any of the others, and should be planted at once. Beets finest quality, before hard freezmay be left in the ground to grow as late as they will, and to be used in the spring as soon as the ground thaws out. Late plantings are especially good for the latter purpose, as they will not be pithy and throw up seed-stalks early in the spring, as plants started last of April or May will do. Even if April or May will do. Even if the spring and the spring of parsing and last week, adopted a resolution you have plenty of parsnip and salsify, or "oyster plant" growing now for your fall and winter use make a generous planting now for a supply for next spring. By making two plantings a year, one a loyal friend and neighbor, his in spring and another in midservices were free.

There is a lesson in that for us tables may be had in the best of condition practically all the year around.

Any spot in the garden will do for these late sowings of root crops, provided it was well enriched in the spring. But to make as sure as possible of the best results, top-dress the parts to be planted with fine bone, or tank-

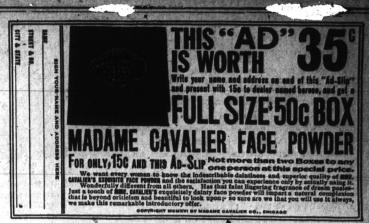

Be sure to thin out the seedling plants as soon as they are large enough. Failure to get the best results with root crops is very often due to neglect in this one respect. Over crowded plants can not make good root development and result in weak top growth. After covering the seed, press the soil down lightly on the surface, to prevent air space and to mark where the row or hill has been planted. On heavy clay soil or very wet weather, of course little or no compacting of the soil over the seeds will be required.
