Last Saturday, when the Red Cross Chapter wanted a place put in shape for serving Brunswick stew to the drafted men, the matter was put before the Scouts. The lot on the corner east of the court house was selected. It was covered with weeds and rubbish, but hoes, rakes, forks and scythes in the hands of the boys Friday evening put it in all right shape in a very short while. It rained Saturday morning and the stew could not be given out-doors, so the boys came into service again and put the buildings adjoining the lot into

Fire Dangers in Schools

Recently throughout the State of New Jersey many old schools constructed without regard to fire prevention, have been condem and new schools ordered built. Dr. Calvin N. Kendall, State Commissioner of Education, has addressed instructions to secre taries and district clerks of board of education, urging that every power be exercised to safeguard children in school buildings. The Newark Board of Educa

Alamance County Sunday School Convention--Institute.

The Alamance County Sunday School Convention-Institute which meets at Haw River, Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 29th and 30th, promises to be the most profitable and most definite meeting ever held under the auspices of the Association.

A study of the program published below will reveal the fact that the Convention is to carry a number of Institute features and at the same time strike for some forwarding and very significant things for the future, including the employment of a man to devote his entire time to the work in the county.

¶The Alamance County Sunday School Association, like all other organizations, is passing through a period of striking transition that calls for much change and readjustment. This fact is in itself encouraging, for it indicates that progress in Sunday School work is the order of the day, and that the old line organizations are simply getting ready to cope with the larger difficulties and larger possibilities that come together with the progress of time If the Sunday Schools are to come in for the major part of the big program of religious education that is now in the making, trained leadership will continue to be the crying need, therefore, it is more important than ever that the pastors, superintendents, officers, teachers and workers attend the coming County Convention, which will give one of the opportunities of many to approach a little more closely the wholesome and comprehensive thing that is possible here in the good county of Alamance.

"All county and township officers, together with pastors and superintendents, are delegates without election to this convention. All schools are expected to send delegates, while friends of the cause, whether delegates or not, are always welcome, not only to the convention, but to participation in the exercises and discussions. There will be an advantage in being on time at the opening session Saturday morning and remaining to the close on Sunday afternoon, due to the fact that the program has been systematically built with reference to definite things to be undertaken both by the county and township associations and individual schools.
