Clover Turned Under

Increases Corn Yield.

Crimson clover is proving its worth as a builder of crop yi when turned under in eastern Car-

"Last fall N. J. Miller of Merry Hill in Bertie County planted about an acre of crimson clover in a tobacco field," reports E. C. Blair, extension agronomist at State College. "The clover made splendid growth this Spring and was finally about two feet high. The county agent, B. E. Grant asked Mr. Miller to leave part of the clover on the land and to mow the remainder for hay to compare the remainder for hay to compare these two methods in a soil building demonstratiun."

'However, Mr. Miller found it impossible to remove all the clover from the area where it was cut for hay. The clover had fallen badly and so a heavy stubble was left. Later, on June 5, corn was planted over the whole field. After a few weeks, it was apparent that the corn after clover would outyield that where no cover crop was grown. Mr. Miller planted soy-beans hetween his corn rows and these also showed the beneficial effects of the clover.

Recently, says Mr. Blair, the corn was harvested and weighed. Where no clover was grown, the yield was was 38.6 bushels per acre; where the clover was cut for hay and the stubble plowed under the yield was 52.9 bushels of grain per acre. All of the corn was fertilized with
