Radium by Sound The London correspondent of the Journal of the American Medical Association reports that after a search lasting eight years eight milligrams of radium in the form of needles had been recovered. The radium had been thrown away by mistake at a British hospital with surgical dressings that had served their purpose. The dressings found their way to an incinerator, and the ashes were in turn scattered on a clinder road. With the aid of a Geiger-Muller counter, of the kind used to detect cosmic rays, the radium was at last recovered.

Radium shoots off rays which ionize or electrify the surrounding air. This electrification can be made audible in the form of a click. The search for radium was undertaken with such a clicking detector.

Neutrality and Embargo

President Will Ask Lift of Embargo on War Supplies—If Repeal, It Will be Cash-and-Carry.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 19.—The United States Government is as neutral as it can be in this new European War. The President has carried out his duties in enforcing embargoes and restrictions that have curtailed shipping at seas and the travels abroad of American citizens.

Before the adjournment of the regular session of Congress the President was defeated in his demands for repeal of embargoes on shipments of arms, ammunitions and implements of war. It should be understood that Congress refused to agree with the President because the passage of such an act at that time would have carried with it a transfer of legislative authority to the Administration.

Now, the President again asks for the repeal of the embargo, and he seems to assume that Congress will agree with him, inasmuch as the war is on. In sounding out the members of the Senate and House he has suggested a course of action that he evidently expected the legislators to approve.

The declarations of Senators Borah, Vandenberg and others show that there are honest and varying opinions about what constitutes neutrality. Borah and Vandenberg represent a school of thought that is opposed to the theories advanced by the President. The senators are opposed to the repeal of the embargoes because that would authorize the sale of planes, munitions and articles of war to European countries.

Therefore, it can be readily seen that there is sure to be a full discussion of the so-called "neutrality repeal" before Congress decides upon its new policies.

Inasmuch as the overwhelming majority of the American public is giving wishful thinking and vehement conversational support to the French and English the chances are that the embargo law will be repealed and that the cash-and-carry system will be put into operation, after congressional deliberation and debate, and arrangements for patched-truces with the Administration.

It has been observed that the country looks to the President for leadership and to Congress for a sober realization of its responsibilities in times of crises.
