Unrationed Shoes

On February 19th shoe dealers began a three-week clearance of men's and women's shoes in odd lots and broken sizes, under a three-week ration holiday declared by OPA. The sale period will end March 10.

All shoes were not included but only hard-to-sell items which had accumulated on the dealers' shelves during the past several months. Children's shoes are not included in the OPA Odd Lot Release since they sell so rapidly there is no need for a ration-free period to move them.

Serving Labor

San Francisco was the first big city I ever saw. Young and interested in everything, I stopped one day to look at a big piece of plate glass being installed in a storefront. It was the lunch hour and the workmen were not busy. As they ate they drank from bottles. When the bottles were empty, they broke them. The incident gave me a distinct shock, and I never forgot it. Back in Oklahoma, 60 miles from a railroad where I had learned to walk as well as to plow, every manufactured thing was deemed to have value. My mother literally hoarded bottles for many useful purposes. A milk bottle would have been prized in her collection. My curiosity won a battle with bashfulness and I asked the workmen why they broke the bottles, and they told me.

Idea to Make Work

"You see, buddy," the foreman explained, "we work in glass. So do the working men who make the bottles. The more bottles we break the more work they will have." Later I learned that this was a tradition of the industry, supposedly based on fellowship and loyalty to labor. At first I was very much confused—loyalty to labor seemed entirely right to me, destructiveness entirely wrong.

Just recently, Edward T. Cheyfitz, national chairman of an important labor union, a member of the National Reconversion Committee of the C.I.O., touched on the subject in as clear and sound an economic treatise as I ever read. It appeared in the December issue of Fortune. He called bottle breaking a waste of labor and raw material, typical of an old fashioned and wrong attitude toward jobs and wages.

For High Production

This big labor leader said, "I know of numerous cases in prewar days where workers deliberately held down production because they had been made to feel that this was the road to wage and employment security. We must educate union membership," he continued, "to practice high productivity. Certainly labor can not increase its own share of goods by producing less."

To sum up the whole article, Mr. Cheyfitz contends that labor and management must find a common ground if our nation, as now constituted, is to survive. He said the survival of labor unions depends on the same thing. To find this common ground, the C.I.O. man suggests that labor and management travel the same road of maximum production. Let me add, he is right.

40-Year Record

History backs him up. High production has always helped labor. In 1899 the average factory employee toiled 60 hours a week and earned only $420 a year because what he produced would sell for no more than $1,030. In 1939 the average factory worker put in only 38 hours a week, turned out $3,140 worth of merchandise and earned $1,150 a year. Good tools make the difference.

With better equipment, the worker produces three times as much and therefore earns three times as much. The formula is still good. Greater and more efficient production will make many jobs at good pay in the postwar years. It will require better equipment but this can be provided wherever employers and employees see eye-to-eye. Mr. Cheyfitz points to the only hope in sight for labor or capital either.

Warming Speeds Up Many Household Tasks

A little warmth will speed up many a household job ordinarily done cold. Egg whites whip better if they are at room temperature rather than cold. The various ingredients in cake blend better if all are the temperature of the kitchen rather than some cold and some warm. Dried fruits and dry beans "soak up" faster in hot water than cold. Hot water is better than cold for rinsing rice, both before and after cooking. In making mashed potatoes hot milk is better than cold because it helps soften lumps, adds to lightness and keeps the potatoes hot. In sprinkling clothes for ironing warm water penetrates and spreads through fabrics faster than cold water. Placing the sprinkled and rolled-up clothes on a warm (not hot) radiator for a short time also helps get the ironing ready in a hurry. Before rubbing oil into shoes to preserve the leather, have the oil slightly warm and the shoes at room temperature. The leather will absorb the oil faster and better. Set a bottle of furniture polish in warm water a few minutes before using, because warm polish penetrates the pores of the wood faster. Wax goes on floors and other surfaces more easily and smoothly if it is not too cold. Paint also needs to have the chill off to spread smoothly. Plant scientists advise tepid water instead of cold. Washing machines, electric mixers or other household motors kept in a cold place should be brought into a warm room a few hours before using. Otherwise the oil or grease may be too stiff to lubricate properly.

Waxed Soles and Heels

Extend Life of Hose

An old European practice for saving wear on heels and toes of stockings has been revived and recommended for use in this country by USDA research people. The practice consists of rubbing paraffin or candle wax on heels and toes of hose. In actual tests on wearing machines this treatment kept hose free from holes four times as long as those untreated. The wax is merely rubbed over the heels and toes of the stockings before each wearing. Even if waxing is not repeated until after several launderings, enough remains to add considerably to the durability, the experiment showed. The wax can be used on cotton, wool or rayon hose. If only a thin film of wax is applied, it will not interfere with the proper laundering of the stockings, nor will it change their appearance, Miss Lane reports.

New Screen

After protracted interference proceeding in the patent office to determine priority of invention—proceedings in which there were several contenders—patents have been issued to Harry W. Thomas and William Dubilier for a nylon window screen which may well displace screens of metal wire after the war. If a hole is made in such a screen with a pencil or any other sharp instrument it will disappear merely by working the material with the fingers. The government is now using about 50,000,000 yards of this self-healing screen material.

Each thread has a series of regularly recurring obtuse crimps in alternately opposite directions so as to form a succession of oppositely directed troughs. After a hole is made in the screen and the fingers do their work, the displaced threads slip back into their proper troughs and stay there, so that the screen looks just as it did before. Without the crimps there would be no troughs, and the displaced threads could not find their original places.

Chinese Speech

The Chinese must rely heavily on variations in pitch and expression of speech because their vocabulary contains so few "vocalics" or separate sounds conveying speech. The Chinese language in the Peking dialect contains only 400 vocalics, compared to uncounted thousands in the English language. Because of this limitation, it is not what you say but how you say it that is the more important. The Chinese word "shih" is heard in nearly every sentence but with any one of many meanings, depending on whether it is said in a tone that is low and plaintive or high and sharp or that slides from one tone to another. The tones are what make Chinese sound strange and like a sing-song to the American ear.

English also contains many words or vocalics that sound alike, such as "aisle," "isle" and "I'll," but the use of tones eliminates any chance of confusion.

Farm Workers

In pre-machine days, when it took three-fourths of the country's manpower to feed the nation, there was little food for export, little labor for munitions plants. Today, by the aid of farm machinery, approximately one-fourth of the people employed on farms can fill the national larder. In the last hundred years, half of the nation's manpower has thus been gradually released to industry.

In 1930, approximately 23 per cent of all persons in the United States 10 years old and over, gainfully employed, were working on farms. In 1930, only 21 per cent of that group were engaged in agriculture.

Canning vegetables and fruits saves money and ration points as well as food, say Extension home economists. The family can be provided with more nutritious meals the year round.

The juice of small oranges is better in flavor and is also richer and sweeter, according to the scientists. The vitamin C value of the juice also averages higher than for larger fruit.

It's a good time now to have cotton seed tested for germination so as to make sure they are satisfactory for spring planting.
