Aberdeen Army Ordnance School

The following news article has just been released by Cpl. Robt. Purcott of Burlington:

The young man who enlists in the New Regular Army and who goes to the Army Ordnance School at Aberdeen, Md., can boast that he has learned to repair anything from a watch to a truck.

For six months, at Aberdeen, the Regular Army soldier is given thorough training in the arts and skills of repair and maintenance, so that he will be able to work on any of the standard equipment that the army has. In this training period they learn that their mission is to guide the development of American weapons and to provide quickly and accurately the answers to ordnance questions.

Typical examples of the accomplishment are seen in the measuring and tracking of missiles and projectiles in order to develop better weapons or in the gruelling road tests that are given to tanks and other vehicles.
