Experiment

Nationalization of industry is the big issue in England. The Labor government, elected last year on a nationalization platform, is proceeding to carry out the program as rapidly as possible. Some sectors of American thought are advocating the same measures for our country. For this reason it is my belief that many readers of this column will find interest in the progress of this socialistic program in England. First step was the nationalization of the Bank of England, upon which the government long has relied for more or less of its own financing, particularly has it obtained large short-term loans for years. The bank's stock belonged to private individuals and had been paying about 3% interest. The government did not evaluate the bank, but simply took over all the stock, giving to all former owners bonds equal to the market value of the stock and bearing 3 per cent. The invaluable hidden assets which invariably accrue to such an institution went to the government without remuneration to the former stockholders. Danger Present

The Bank of England also was given power to require other banks ing policies as it might decide to issue. Some experienced bank-ers fear that the day may come when the government, because of exten-sive deficit financing, will advocate unsound banking policies which would react badly upon the finan-cial status of the United Kingdom. Policies already adopted by the bank have led to the discontinuing interest formerly paid on deposits and savings accounts.

Industries slated for nationaliza tion by the Labor government are: (1) Transportation, including rail-roads, transport buses, street-cars, canal barges, and coastal shipping.
(2) Utilities, including production and distribution of electric power and the operation of water systems throughout the Kingdom, (3) The iron and steel industry, and (4) Civil

Complications in Steel Perhaps the most complex problems for nationalization are presented by the iron and steel industry. This is a highly skilled craft, requiring skills and know-how to be found only in the present manage-ment of the industry. Many impor-tant but closely related industries in manufacturing, from needles to locomotives, would be affected.

me that the government would take over production of steel and iron up to the point where the metal was al-lowed to cool, regardless of the form in which that might be. However, another economist stated that this policy would draw the line of demarcation for nationalized industry right through the center of some plants which were accustomed to using a continuous process until metals were actually shaped into materials for sale.

Some observers in England think difficulties will be so great that the government finally will give up the scheme of nationalizing the iron and steel industries. In fact, the gov-ernment has recently indicated the scheme would be postponed for at least four years. One steel operator ventured that production per man-hour would certainly go down when and if the government took over. One of his reasons was that the workers would be at points en-tirely too far removed from the source of authority. He also af-firmed that in his opinion workers did not like the idea of nationaliza-
