PRESERVING FENCES.

CRUDE PETROLEUM THE BEST SUBSTANCE FOR PREVENTING THE DECAY OF POSTS.

The preservation of wire fences during the past century has saved the farmers a large amount of time and labor, which he has been able to devote to more profitable employment than that of rail splitting. The expensive work of clearing up a large track of woods merely to get enough rails to enclose and separate the fields, reflected little credit on the intelligence of the owners of large farms, where several miles of fence were required. Those who were not wise enough to grow hedge fences found themselves working to a disadvantage, and in the long run were great losers.

Although the barbed wire fence has solved the problem of building these most useful of farm auxiliaries, it has left the question but partly answered, and there is still plenty of room for improvement. The greatest cost to farmers, even in the early days of farming in this country, was not to purchase the rails as the post, after the fence was once built. The difficulty was then as it is to day, that the post decays very quickly at the point where it enters the ground. To prevent this continual and rapid decay has been a deep puzzle for many years, and a medium for preserving the post from decay at a light cost has been eagerly sought for. The post at the point of decay are alternately exposed to the situation of water and drying, thereby thereby combustion, more or less severe. The action of air and moisture, and wood and other vegetable substance are gradually changed to humus, a black impalpable constituent of soil.

Various experiments have been tried by farmers to prevent their fence posts from decay, and in many cases they succeed partially. Charring the posts prevents decay for a short time on the outside, but the interior is not affected in the least by this means. In the same way tar and paint applied to the surface of the posts do not materially prevent decay. The posts decay from below and saturates the post almost as thoroughly as if not painted at all. The only feasible plan so far discovered is to saturate the whole post, interior and exterior, with some preservative substance. Crude petroleum oil is recommended for this work, on account of its cheapness and the ease with which it can be applied. The posts should be stood up in tanks containing the oil, and allowed to remain there until the wood will absorb no more oil. The oil should be allowed to sink into the posts at least a foot above where they are set in the ground. Not until the oil has been absorbed by the posts should they be removed from the tanks. One must be taken that the posts are thoroughly dry before placing them in the oil, otherwise the petroleum will not penetrate to the heart of the wood. With this treatment, the posts will last three times as long as if simply painted with tar, or charred by fire. The work of oiling them is not difficult, nor is it expensive; in the end it is a real economy.

Rotation of Crops.

SOME NEW LIGHT ON AN AGRICULTURAL TOPIC OF GREAT INTEREST.

Perhaps this subject engrosses the mind of the farmer as much as any other connected with his business. Many articles have been written on the subject, published in the agricultural journals, and discussed by the readers, and yet, to-day, many farmers are undecided as to which is the most successful course for them to pursue. In selecting a course for their crops, the farmer must be guided by the fact that nature has made the most important on the corn and root crops, from

Education is the cheapest defense of a nation. Vanity and pride and arrogance and envy and all uncharitableness are the outgrowth of ignorance. To reach and remove this ignorance our common schools should be made as efficient as possible. To make them more efficient we need better teachers. To secure better teachers there must be the means provided of teaching the teachers how to teach, and a sound and public sentiment must demand better qualifications—Pittsboro Home.

If there is any issue upon which a party's position should be thoroughly understood, it is this. Yet the declaration of the last Democratic national platform was so worded as to enable a fraction to twist it to a meaning directly opposite to that which its authors doubtless intended, and to the traditional policy of the party. This fraction has since thwarted all efforts to carry into effect the promises made to the people. It is not too late to make an honest effort to keep faith with them, and it is cheering to know that such an effort will soon be made. This is the instance in which the Democratic party has been most at fault.—Goldboro Herald.

We wish consumers to be benefited, and not that the monopolists should profit at the cost of the consumers. The Internal Revenue is a war measure, and as are the duties on necessities, so in this particular they stand upon the same footing and to repeal the Internal Revenue first would surely render it necessary to continue, if not increase, this burden which now falls heavily on the farmer. Whiskey and tobacco are by no means necessary. It is not uncommon to see any one to chew or drink a bad one, nevertheless it is better for the people, and we believe also to the manufacturer, that it remain. He who dances must pay the fiddler; so he who drinks must in the end pay the tax. It is a voluntary one, and no one is compelled to pay it unless he indulges in this expensive luxury of his own free will. We shall be glad to see the Internal Revenue collected by the States for their own individual use, but as our national expenses are increasing in paying pensions, we do not care to see heavier burdens placed upon the back and sinews of the land, that people may drink and chew at less expense.—Fayetteville Observer.

A SOUND MIND IN A SOUND BODY.

Science and philosophy have exhausted themselves in profound theories to determine the just relation between mind and matter, between body and soul, how to preserve the equilibrium between the two, and how to restore it when it is lost by sickness of the body. This great problem has successfully been solved by a gentleman in North Carolina, by experience on himself, proving that an ounce of practical experience is worth several pounds of scientific or philosophical theorizing. Mr. Hamlin is one of the best known insurance men in Winston-Salem, and his health is a fine example of the result of his system.

Georgetown—Ever since I was seven years of age I have had what the doctors call rheumatism, and what I call white swelling. My hip was drawn out of place. There was a swelling at the knee joint, and there was a profuse running, which has been there for years. Of course this has greatly crippled my system, and I have been a great deal of time in bed. I tried every known blood purifier to build up my system, but none did me good. I always build me up, giving me appetite and digestion, and enabling me to stand the long, trying, elevating hot summer days. To me there is no such medicine for purifying the blood and building up the wasted system as S. S. S. On using it I soon became strong of body and easy of mind. My color changed from a pale, worn look to a healthy robust complexion.

A Remarkable Occurrence.

Wilson Mirror.

Maggie Sims, a negro girl of this place, who was born deaf and dumb about seventeen years ago. At an early age she was sent to an institution for the deaf and dumb where she learned to read and write, where she also learned a faith in the efficacy of prayer. She prayed day and night, that her tongue might be recalled from its long banishment and that her ears might be opened to the music of human voice and song. On Friday, the channels of her ears were opened and the fetters of silence fell from the captive tongue. Yes, it is a fact that Maggie Sims was given the power to speak and bear for the first time in her life, and she declares that it is but the long deferred answer of God to her ceaseless stream of wordless prayer.

IN BRIEF, AND TO THE POINT.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existence. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cooking, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in restoring this bad business and making the American people as healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.
