NEW YORK LETTER. NEW YORK, June 1, 1891. DEAR EDITOR:—Any man who visits New York and is at all observant will be impressed with one fact, and that is that the people of every nationality, old, young, rich and poor, are a newspaper reading people.

AGLANCE BACKWARD. One observes with regret the quietness with which certain persons who would be offended if their Democracy were questioned, contemplate the possible formation of a third party; and the matter-of-fact way in which it is assumed that if a third party is formed "they will be in it."

Business-Like. Editors, as every one knows, are very busy set, with no time to waste upon long-winded callers or unnecessary formalities. The Atlanta Constitution cites a typical illustration. A Georgia editor, who is also a real estate agent, a building and loan association director, an attorney-at-law, clerk of the Town Council and pastor of the village church, was recently called upon to perform the marriage ceremony.

the American States in the Union that had been the pride of our people and the wonder of mankind. As a sequence also came the war, the hetacomb of victims offered up on the battlefield; the immeasurable sufferings of women and children, and of heroic men whose pains and distresses made veritable mountains of human woe.

And shall we go on and suggest as a result of the same cause—the split in the Democratic party of 1860—the various other ills that have befallen the people; the changes made in the Constitution; the heavy burdens which the people have borne; the drift of the government to centralization, and the rapid march made toward that final overthrow of popular liberty regulated by Constitutional guarantees, which will doubtless sooner or later overtake us?

All of these things would not have happened at the time, had there been no assertion of the right of the Democratic people to overthrow their constitutional party and after the fashion of Sampson to pull down the temple of Democracy about their ears.

A Word with the People. It is rather to be regretted that the young men of this generation pay so little attention to the social organizations which in the past developed the oratorical abilities of Webster, Everett, Calhoun and the present long-sentence-speaker Evans of New York.

EXTRACT OF AN ADDRESS. Agriculture is not only the master wheel of all business, but also the foundation of every nation's prosperity. Farming was the ordinary vocation that God gave man when he created him, and the farmer is, and of right ought to be, the most independent member of society.

FROWN UPON MONOPOLY. We believe in the adage that "in union there is strength. United, we stand; divided, we fall." But, while adhering to this principle, we should frown upon monopoly and stand squarely upon our own platform: "Equal rights to all; special privileges to none."

IMPROVING COUNTY ROADS. Conservation is the best policy. Then let our motto be: "Live and let live," and the Lord will bless us in our undertakings. Let us strive, not to put other honest men down, but to build ourselves up. Let us work to improve our farms, to make better roads for our teams, to obtain better schools for farmers' children; and to secure better social advantages for farmers' families.

Within the past few years a change for the better has taken place, and real attention is being paid to this neglected phase of our social economy. The railroads have recognized the importance to their own interests and to those of their communities they serve of good roads, passable at all times. Certain railroad managements have facilitated in all ways the improvement of the roads in their territory.

This is particularly true in the West, where the utter neglect of the old-fashioned highway was most prevalent. The same movement has gained force in the East to an extent which has greatly improved the character of such public works. State legislatures have in several instances passed statutes on the subject, permitting counties and townships to incur debts for that purpose, or changing the system of local control over the roads so that the loose methods of construction and repair by amateurs are replaced by the intelligent supervision of trained engineers.

The prime cause of most of the nervous diseases and ailments with which humanity is afflicted may be traced to indigestion. The irritable man, the unhappy woman, the fretful child, contrive to make all around them miserable. They dose themselves for nervousness, and perhaps find temporary relief, only to grow more nervous when the inevitable reaction comes. It is in such cases that S. S. S. gives almost immediate relief. It builds up the entire system, purifies the blood, gives tone to the digestive organs, restores the functions of the stomach, gives activity to the liver, and puts all the nerves in tune with health and good humor.

Those who favor the subtreasury plan, say to those who oppose it, "offer us a better plan for the relief of the people, or hush up." A better plan was offered by the Alliance and taught by them. "Keep out of debt." This is exactly what they taught, and it was the true doctrine. If we would all live squarely up to it we would have no need of sub-treasury or government warehouses to store away the products of the soil.
