ANNA BELLE AND MARJORIE PLAY BASKETBALL

Basketball?—Sure, you've played it. Marjorie, you remember her, and I have been playing with my new outfit since the last time I wrote to you. Guess how I got it? You couldn't guess in a hundred years. It was given to me. Wasn't that fine? You, of course, remember sister Mary's bear, who is now off at college; well, he sent it to me. You know he likes me fine, because he—now this is a secret—because he gets me to put in a good word for him whenever I can. And I like him, too—wouldn't you? He plays basketball and football, and baseball and everything. He says basketball is fine for little girls and boys. We let Jack and Harold play with us when they're good and won't be rough with us girls.

Please write to me as often as you can little friends. I some times get lonely on these long days and I wish for a letter from you. Tell me of what you are doing after school, how you will spend Easter and things you would have me do for you. Lovingly,
ANNA BELLE
