AN UNUSUAL EXPERIENCE.
(By Chas. K. Harris, Author of "After The Ball.")
"I am going home," she said, with a clear and determined look in her eye. She followed up the statement with the further information that she was seeking employment in order to facilitate her trip.
"You see, Mr. Harris, like others of my kind, I come from a small town in Wisconsin, where those who had admitted my work in amateur theatricals, had insisted that the big city was waiting for me and my talents. I arrived here about three weeks ago, and with but meager funds have had the battle every self-respecting young girl has had to endure when she tries to catapult herself into the big affairs of this man's town. I have been refused all kinds of employment wherever I have sought it. My eyes have been opened as to the trials and tribulations necessary to win success in New York. I know deep down in my heart that alone as I am, I am unequal to it, and I am frank enough to say it is not a question of foolish pride, or questionable grit, but rather a long thought out conclusion, which has brought me face to face with the fact that I belong home instead of endeavoring to put up with the strife. Frankly, I am seeking employment as a singer, pianist, or stenographer, in order to earn enough money to take me to my home town, where I have a loving mother and hosts of friends, who will believe me when I explain to them the conditions necessary to a career in New York. Thank you, sir, I do not care to accept the money without repaying you, and the only way that I can do this is in the form of a promise. I really did not believe there was one human being in this big cold city, where eyes are bold and hearts are cold. I certainly will, and you will hear from me in a week or so," and she softly closed the door with the ten dollar bill clutched securely in her right hand.
A few weeks passed, and Chas. K. Harris received a letter. The letter told of the girl's reception at her home. Her immediate re-employment as cashier in the General Store, and that she would send one dollar weekly, so as to pay back the ten she had borrowed in order to get home to her work, her contentment and mother, and from this simple human story Mr. Harris has written his latest ballad entitled "I'M GOING HOME," which was inspired by the sight of a young girl, hungry for the love of her mother, and honest enough to admit defeat in her one-sided struggle. "I'M GOING HOME" has its appeal, and the appeal is in the heart, where the young girl first felt the twinge of loneliness and insecurity, and remedied it by being brave enough to face the truth.
The song follows:
I'm Going Home
1.
My heart is weary, mother dear,
I've tried to hide its pain.
But 'tis no use, I'm longing still,
To see you all again.
The big, cold city is so hard
For one wee girl alone,
And no one cares just how you live,
That's why I'm going home.
CHORUS.
I'm going home, no more I'll roam,
I'm going back where the flowers bloom.
To sweetest charms, my mother's arms.

CIGARETTE
No cigarette has the same delicious flavor as Lucky Strike. Because Lucky Strike is the toasted cigarette.

And where the birds sing their sweet tunes,
No more I'll stray the Great White Way,
Where eyes are bold, and where hearts are cold,
I want to feel, one kiss that's real,
I'm going home, I'm going home.
2.
I've wandered o'er the city streets,
All tired and forlorn.
And many times I've often pray'd
That I had ne'er been born.
Sweet memories steal o'er me tonight,
I see the shady lane,
My heart is set, my eyes are wet,
I'm going home again.
