THE CARELESS CAMELS.
"It's very careless of you, Cousin Camel. Very careless of you, indeed. I'd be surprised at such carelessness only I know you haven't any brains or much brain power or a great many sensible ideas in your head. And so long as you're not so very clever I suppose one shouldn't scold you for being careless."

"Some careless people are clever, some clever people are careless," said Cousin Camel, moving his mouth from side to side and round and round in a funny circle.
"Some careless people are stupid, too; some stupid people are careless, also," he added. "But, Cousin Dromedary, I have a reason for my carelessness."
"Indeed?" asked Cousin Dromedary. "Pray tell it to me."

"Well," said Cousin Camel, as he continued to chew and move his mouth, "perhaps it's not much of a reason, but it is a reason.
"That is something. Not much—but something." And then Cousin Camel began to say in a sing-song voice:
To have a reason is something fine,
I need say no more, but can end this line.
Yet I might add that I chew all the time,
And that that is the end of this, my rhyme.

Cousin Camel smiled at Cousin Dromedary and said, winking an eye: "Well, sir, what do you think of the camel poet?"
"I don't believe I'd better tell you," said Cousin Dromedary. "After all, we still want to be friends."
"True, true," grinned Cousin Camel, who saw nothing to object to in what Cousin Dromedary had just said.
"You aren't as big as I am," Cousin Camel went on, "and you are not so heavy in weight. You can get along more quickly, it is true. But you have two sorrows in life. One is that you only have one hump and the other is that you have no beautiful long hair as I have."

"That all depends on the point of view," said Cousin Dromedary. "I prefer having only one hump and I don't want to be bothered with long hair. My family like to be this way. We all are and we all do alike in our country, which, by the way, is the country of Africa."
"True," said Cousin Camel, "just as we all do alike in my country, which is that of Asia. We have two humps apiece. Ah, yes! I have two humps, and such superb, beautiful, magnificent, lovely camel humps as they are."

Cousin Camel Smiled.

"I never heard any one else speak of them in just such glowing terms," said Cousin Dromedary.
"What are glowing terms?" asked Cousin Camel.
"They are terms or sayings which glow with fine, high-sounding expressiveness."
"Oh, well," said Cousin Camel, "you see I can talk finely, after all."
"But it is not well to boast about yourself."

"I am kind enough to do it," said Cousin Camel, "so as to save others the trouble. They might be busy, you know. I suppose, Cousin Dromedary, that you are aware of the fact that my family name is that of Bactrian Camel. Members of our family often are found in a circus tent. But here I am, and two other members of my family, in this fine zoo."
"To be sure," said Cousin Dromedary, "and that was just what I was speaking about in the first place. During the summer you took people for rides and many visitors came to the zoo. You didn't care then about your long hair at all. You didn't mind it in the least because you looked far from beautiful and quite shorn, in fact."
"But now that winter has come you let your beautiful hair grow fine and long and very few will see you."
"Ah!" said Cousin Camel, "You think we are careless because we do this way. But I must tell you the reason for it. It is because we want to save our beauty for those who will brave the winter weather to come and call on us. Now, isn't that a fine, noble reason? Of course," he added, with the biggest and broadest of grins covering his entire face, "it's a family habit and we don't outgrow a family habit like that, never—it's quite impossible."

"Impossible for you, perhaps," said Cousin Dromedary, "but still I can't help saying, 'Careless Camels.'"
"Say it all you like," ended Cousin Camel. "I'd rather chew than argue."

ANNOUNCEMENT!

I wish to extend my deepest appreciations to the many people in Louisburg, especially the members of the Fire Department, who so nobly tried to save my property in the fire on Monday morning, and for the many expressions of sympathy.

Now that my entire stock has been destroyed by fire it becomes more necessary that I collect what is due me and I shall ask them to come forward and assist me to a point where I may again enter business. I don't feel that you will await a second request and I certainly hope you won't. You can find me at the Farmers & Merchants Bank, just across the street from my old stand.
