

HOUSEWORK IS A BURDEN

Woman's lot is a weary one at best. But with backache and other distressing kidney ills life indeed becomes a burden. Doan's Kidney Pills have made life brighter for many Louisburg women. Ask your neighbor!

Mrs. N. L. Moseley, Louisburg, says: "My back hurt badly and when I got down, it was an awful effort to straighten again. Sharp pains often stabbed through my kidneys and many times when I got up from a stooped position, I could see flashes before my eyes. My kidneys acted too freely and I felt miserable. It was an effort to do my housework and at times my head swam with dizziness. Doan's Kidney Pills were recommended to me and I bought some of the Aycock Drug Co. Doan's rid me of the misery and I have had no trouble since."

Price 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Moseley had. Foster-Fulburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

"Slander"

There is nothing which flies so swiftly as slander; nothing which is uttered with more ease; nothing which is listened to with more readiness or dispersed more widely. Slander soaks into the mind as water soaks into a sponge! Slander is like a fire which burns with fiercer conflagration as its power increases.

The tongue of slander is never tired. We sometimes wonder how it manages to keep itself in employment. It is never so available and eloquent as when it can blight the hopes of the noble-minded, soil the reputation of the pure, or destroy the character of the brave and the strong. Now can people do it? Persons of high estate can take delight in slander. It indicates that somewhere in the soul there is a weakness—an evil nature. Never does a man portray his own character more vividly than when he is portraying another. There is something wrong with the person who always has something to say about somebody, but never anything good.

How small a thing will start a slanderous report! A distrustful look, a shrug of the shoulders, a slight raise of the eye-brows or a mysterious and reasonable whisper, directing attention to a particular person will often start the tongue of slander. Little is the beginning, but great is the end! What could be worse than ruining an innocent person's reputation? Even though one's reputation is only what he is thought to be, we must confess that a good one helps much, where a bad one is destruction.

We may take advantage of a slanderer. When you are ill spoken of take it as a caution. If you have not deserved it, you are none the worse; if you have, then mend. Believe not all you hear nor report all you believe. "Have no ill of a friend nor speak any of an enemy." Believe nothing against another but on good authority, nor report what may hurt anybody unless it be a greater hurt to others to conceal it."

The Tendencies of Our Literary Societies

There is a growing tendency in our high school to neglect and ignore the literary societies. The teachers strive valiantly to make them interesting and beneficial but the student body remains indifferent, and inclined to treat the matter as a huge joke. To an outsider our weekly meetings would resemble more closely a negro revival meeting than an organization engaged in the pursuit of literature. The debates are often impromptu and ridiculous and we cannot blame the debaters, for the more ridiculous the discussion the more appreciative the audience. The society as a whole rarely honors an earnest performer with its attention.

If the prospective voters, when they attain the age of twenty-one, continue conducting elections as they are conducting at present the government a few years hence will be in a pitiable state. How can we ever hope to purify national politics when in literary society elections forty-four votes are cast by thirty-four voters? Not even woman suffrage with its vast possibilities and accomplishments will ever be able to correct such evils. What incentive is there to try to make the literary society a success, when, during the reading of an instructive paper, one illustrious member takes a nap and another amuses by pulling the hair of some long suffering sister member. Anything is preferable to the existing state of affairs, even the intricate angles and triangles of Geometry.

A Fox Hunt

A few days ago I bought a couple of fine fox hounds. There were about twelve more fox hounds scattered around the neighborhood in which I lived. The fox hunting season had just arrived and there were lots of foxes in the neighborhood. All the boys in the neighborhood were anxious for us to meet and have a fox chase. We decided to go the next day.

We could hardly wait for daylight the next morning, and by six o'clock we were all ready to start. We had a little pack of fourteen hounds. Every one of these dogs were well trained and not a single one of them would even notice a rabbit or anything else when on a fox chase.

We started at once. After saddling our horses and after riding for a couple or more miles, we jumped a fox and the dogs were trailing fine. It looked as if the fox picked out the very worst route that he could have taken, for we had to ride over some of the roughest and most rugged country. Then he went through some thick woods which led to a large creek. We looked down a hill and saw the fox crossing the creek on a log. The dogs were only about two hundred yards behind him then. We could not cross over the creek on the log, so we had to go to a bridge some distance up the creek. Just as we came in sight of the fox again, the dogs had him—and they had already killed him when we reached them. It was now two o'clock and we were hungry and tired and I was very sure that the dogs were tired too. We decided not to try another chase until some other time, so we started for home about ten miles away.

Success

The greatest success in life is won by those who began by making the most of opportunities around them. Nearly all young men, whether on the farm or in the office, have splendid opportunities on every hand, but they do not know how to utilize them. In our large cities it is found that a very large per cent of all who gain fame and wealth do so by making the best of small opportunities which others do not notice. The scholar who is always gazing at the stars may miss the beautiful flowers at his feet. It has been truly said that spare moments are the gold dust of time. It is the little sayings that make men rich. It is the right use of spare moments that enable men to win education, competence and success. One hour a day in a few years will give anyone an education that will fit him for life. An hour a day might make all the difference between a bare existence, and a useful happy living. The present time is the raw material out of which one can make whatever he will. Do not brood over the past or dream of the future, but seize the instant, do your present duty; make the most of present opportunity.

One reason why the careers of many people are so pinched and narrow is because they do not cherish right thoughts. What ever one longs for, struggles for, and holds persistently in mind tends to become just in exact proportion to the persistence of the thought. We should think upward then we would reach the heights where superiority dwells. There is probably no power in the universe that can enable a man to do a thing when he thinks he is incapable.

Louisburg Vs. Epsom

On Thursday, March 30, the girls basketball team of the Louisburg High School met the Epsom team at Epsom. Although they were not expecting us, when we arrived, they got the players together and there followed a very interesting game.

A last foul on the Louisburg side gave the game to Epsom with a score of 10 to 9.

A Petrified Sheep

One beautiful summer day a crowd of boys and girls went to Berlin Springs on a picnic. When we finished eating our dinner, we decided to explore the cave, which we had heard contained a petrified sheep.

After we had crawled several hundred feet back in the cave a large white object attracted our attention. As we drew nearer, I recognized a huge rock in the form of a sheep. We all crowded around, afraid to speak because the sheep looked so real. The fleece looked very soft and inviting; but when I touched it, I was disappointed, for it was cold and hard. The head of the sheep was turned to one side and the ears were uplifted as if anticipating the approach of someone. It was a beautiful sight.
