Plant Something This Spring

Raleigh, N. C. April 30 Those who last week pass without doing anything more definite about Garden week than reading the notices, should determine to plant something this spring anyway, says F. E. McCall, Garden Specialist for the Agricultural Extension Service. Mr. McCall urges that something should actually be planted so that the grower may feel that he is helping North Carolina take her place as a leading horticultural State. He suggests that some good blight proof tomatoes of the Norduke, Marvel and Norton varieties be planted. A few carrots, parsnips and ground cherries may be started or a few plants of the improved blue-berries along with raspberries and dewberries will give a start with small fruits. He says, "Locate some good flowering shrub in the woods. Prune the roots now by taking a spade and cutting away all lateral roots about eighteen inches out each way from the main stem. Leave the plant to develop new roots this summer and transplant it next November. Lawn grass seed will grow better if some woods mould is mixed in with the top soil."

These suggestions by Mr. McCall are in line with the live-at-home program of the Agricultural Extension Service and the effort being made by horticultural workers to beautify the farmstead of Carolina and encourage the all year garden.
