HARD OR SOFT PORK

Raleigh, June 24.—At the present time there are eight different states including North Carolina that are cooperating with the Bureau of Animal Industry at Washington in an effort to solve the problem of soft pork. In addition to this cooperative work several of the states are doing special and independent work.

"The soft pork problem is being attacked from two different angles namely to determine the causes of soft pork and to utilize the products of the soft and oily carcasses to the best advantage," says Earl Hostetler in charge of Swine Investigations for the State College Experiment Station.

"All of the hogs shipped from Southern territory to any of the larger markets are sold 'subject' that is, before the hogs are paid for, they are killed and held in the coolers for 36 to 48 hours. If the carcasses from these hogs 'chill out' satisfactorily the regular market price is paid for them. However, in case they are still soft or oily after this chilling period, a 'dock' of from one to three cents per pound is made depending on the location of the market and the degree of softness in the carcass.

The objections given by the packers to soft and oily pork are that the meat is difficult to cut, is objectionable to the retail trade, will not produce firm lard, and shrinks excessively in the cure.

"Experiments conducted at this station and confirmed by other experiment stations have proven conclusively that pork from peanut hogs does not shrivel excessively during the curing and smoking process; and in any section where cured hams from peanut fed hogs are on the market it is readily admitted that the flavor is superior to that in hams from hogs that have been fed other feeds."

Mr. Hostetler states that one packing house located in a southern state is making a speciality of peanut hams, and where the regular hams sell for twenty five cents per pound, they are able to secure forty cents per pound for these hams from peanut-fed hogs.

The Board of Agriculture in Cleveland County is now working with the county home and farm agent in getting the people to name their farms. Every farm in North Carolina should have an appropriate name and be called by that name.
