

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

To break up a cold over night or to cut short an attack of gripe, influenza or sore throat, physicians and druggists are now recommending Calotabs, the nausealess Calomel tablet, that is purified from dangerous and sickening effects. Those who have tried it say that it acts like magic, by far more effective and certain than the old style calomel, heretofore recommended by physicians.

One or two Calotabs at bed time with a swallow of water,—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with eating, work or pleasures. Next morning your cold has vanished and your system feels refreshed and purified. Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages, price ten cents for the vest-pocket size; thirty-five cents for the large family package. Recommended and guaranteed by druggists. Your money back if you are not delighted.—adv.

Twenty Years Before

By Charlie E. Ford

Twenty years before today, Colgate had been defeated by Nebraska. They had not played in twenty years because Colgate was in the Western Conference and Nebraska wasn't. Nebraska could play freshmen on her team but Colgate couldn't for this reason, they had not lost a foot ball game in twenty years.

Everybody had turned out to see the big game and the renewal of yearly battles, because Nebraska had joined the conference. Now each year they would again meet. Harry Munson, sat in the grandstand, waiting for the whistle to blow, he was a man of about 38 years of age, his hair was turning gray, he was thinking how twenty years before, he had played on the winning Nebraska team, and was the one man that won the game for Nebraska by circling Colgate's right end for eighty yards and a touch-down, the only score of that great game. How the people and students had worshipped him, everybody shook his hands, he was the hero. Now twenty years after, he had been forgotten, but he had a son on the Nebraska squad. It was his first year. The one thing that he wanted his son to do was to make a foot ball player. As he was thinking this, a hand slapped him on the back and jerked him up. He looked around and saw twenty or thirty students surrounding him, one yelled "We've got him." They drug him down to the front of the stands and the Nebraska cheer leader raised his hands and shouted to the stands. "This is the man that beat Colgate twenty years ago, give him fifteen mighty yells." Never on Grant field had there been heard such a yell as was given him. After it was over, he was carried and seated in a special box seat, and sitting around him he thought he saw familiar faces and he recognized them, there was his old teammates. As they were all talking, a cheer was heard and the Colgate team trotted out. A second later another cheer, and the Nebraska team jogged upon the field. Harry Munson saw his son, pointed him out to the other men.

The game started, the ball was in the possession of each team in turns, it went back and forth. The half was up, neither side had scored. The last half began and still the ball stayed entirely in the middle of the field. Harry Munson stood up, with the rest of the stands and shouted, it was his boy, the stands shouted to him to do what his father had done. He couldn't do it by himself, and there wasn't but two minutes to play. The ball was on the twenty yard line, Nebraska had eighty yards to go, Colgate was playing them off of their feet, it was the third down, Munson dropped back to punt, instead the ball was thrown to him and he started around right end, down the line, the boy had done what his father had twenty years before.

At Daybreak

By Margaret Turner

The gypsy troupe had halted near the river to make their camp for the night. It was before the days of automobiles and the gypsy men were busy unhitching their horses. The women were getting ready to prepare the evening meal while the little boys of the camp were busy gathering faggot and brush wood to build the fire. There was a hush over the gypsy camp except for the singing of the women as they worked. Everyone seemed happy and glad to be alive. Down the trail wandered a lonely gypsy girl, Zara the princess of the tribe. She among all those gypsies seemed to be the only one unhappy except the boy Pedro as yet his horses were unhitched and unfed. A pathetic picture he made standing on a rock near the river bank gazing out over the water across the river. On the hill stood the house of a wealthy cattle raiser. His son by the gypsy using this place oftentimes for a camping ground, had fallen in love with the beautiful Zara. One look at her was enough to know that his life would never be happy without her. The winter that had just passed had caused the death of most of the gypsy chiefs cattle. On this trip he found himself almost penniless and without any cattle and with out any hopes. He wasn't able to buy any more to trade in the markets. As a last resort the old gypsy had planned a marriage between his daughter Zara and the wealthy cattle owners son. The gypsies were now awaiting the ceremony which was to be performed at day break. Pedro the gypsy, loved the girl Zara and his love had been returned. They had planned for weeks some way to escape but each plan had failed and they knew that to dis-

be the chiefs wishes meant death. By eight the camp was asleep. Early before dawn Pedro stole silently from his tent down to the rock by the river. The sun rose dawn breaks in the east the gypsy camp was all abustle the singing and dancing could be heard for miles around. Zara stood at the door of her fathers tent awaiting for the approach of the bride groom. But where was Pedro? Minutes passed, finally on the clear morning a shot rang out. The merriment in the camp turned to awe. The men ran to the river. Pedro alone was rowing a little canoe steadily towards the bank. "He will not be here" he said. "Zara, I, your Pedro, have found a way," the chieftain turned and with the look of gladness on his daughters face his good let him running to the gypsy woman he said: "Is not the wedding breakfast prepared? Pedro my son why do you and Zara put off longer the happy day?" In the gypsy camp by the river just as the dawn was greeting the earth with its early morning colors of gold and red, Zara and Pedro were married.

Pretty Negligees Arrive in Many Styles

Just before Christmas the annual new crops of negligees make their appearance in the shops. They are of many kinds, ranging all the way from the little breakfast jacket, pretty, brief and frivolous, to rather gorgeous affairs of satin or velvet in long negligees. With them appear boudoir and breakfast caps—these are belongings that make an enticing appeal as Christmas gifts.

A light and silky cotton corduroy, in many rich and cheerful colors, has proven itself to be about the best medium for negligees that are at once practical and handsome. They are cut on graceful lines, and the easiest things to slip on in the morning. One of them, in henna-colored corduroy, is shown here. Sometimes a lining to match, of mercerized and silky-looking cotton material, is used, but as often they are unlined.
