PUTTING TO DEATH

Rev. W. A. Stanbury was the "spiritual adviser" to the Stewarts, father and son who recently paid the penalty for a double murder; was of necessity a witness to their execution in the electric chamber at the penitentiary, for the duty devolved upon him to follow them to the door of earthly exit. It is to be assumed that Mr. Stanbury had never before witnessed a legal execution and the scene made a profound impression upon his mind. It resolved this minister into an enemy of capital punishment. He advised Governor McLean of his conversion to the doctrine of the anti through medium of a letter in which he undertook to impress upon the mind of the Governor the conclusion that capital punishment is "barbarous, cruel and unjustified." He had seen two men put to death by the law and his sensibilities were shocked, but even so, he held to the conviction that under the laws of the state and the circumstances of the murder, Governor McLean could have not taken any course other than the one he pursued. But he arraigned the law under which these two men were put to death. The sight of it made him shudder and cry aloud for abolishment of the law. He had seen but one side. Perhaps if Mr. Stanbury could have been an eye witness to the scenes attending the attack upon the two officers of the law by the two moonshiners and the absolute brutality which characterized the putting to death of these officers, he might have reflected for the State as he had reflected against it in the matter of the execution of the murderers: "Here two lives—and life is the sacred thing we know on earth—are being thrust out into the unknown." The murderers were taking what they could not possibly give back. Was not life as valuable to the two officers as it was to the two moonshiners who took it? The sensations aroused in the minds of the emotionalists at sight of executions in the electric chair might vanish if they could call up in their own minds the scenes attending the taking of the life for which the penalty was being exacted. Too many people are inclined to see one side to the picture. Much commiseration has been manifested for the families of the executed men. What of the families of the murdered men? And what of ushering them unprepared into the great unknown? Did these murderers give their victims time to so much as say a prayer? On the other hand, the murderers had "the benefit of the clergy." The Scriptures were read to them and prayers were said for them. They were advantaged by every possible preparation to meet their God. They were the objects of distinguished consideration. They perished by the sword they had taken up.

The expressions by Governor McLean brought out after consideration of the protesting letter by the spiritual adviser of the Stewarts, covered the points with precision and without undue argumentation. Governor McLean properly contends that capital punishment should be exacted only in extreme cases, but it is necessary "for protection of society." The conditions prevailing all over the nation would make it "unwise to abandon the death penalty at this time." That might be taken to indicate that the Governor believes the time may come when abolishment of capital punishment may be accomplished without menace to the safety of society, but the world must grow very much better before that day arrives. Meantime, the argument against the cruelty of the electric chair may be met by thoughts of the cruelty at the scene of the murder.—Charlotte Observer.

ADVERTISING KEEPS LOCAL TRADE AT HOME

Louisburg, May 11—Merchants of Greensboro were much disturbed by the reported amount of money sent out of that city for purchases from out side points, largely through mail order houses. Quite a campaign was put on to acquaint people with local merchants, and prices with resulting good effect.

It is felt that the best way to keep the local trade of Franklin County in Louisburg is to make full use of the means of acquainting local residents with the advantages of buying at home. This means advertising.

Mail-order houses get business from here for two reasons: First, because they may have commodities which are not obtainable here; and second, because they let people know what they have for sale. It is possible that the first of these competitions can be overcome by local merchants unless they should stock slow-moving and unprofitable merchandise; and no merchant can afford to do that.

The second competition can be more easily met. Perhaps the advertising manager of Franklin Times can help merchants plan advertising campaigns which will present the advantages of quality or price or immediate delivery so effectively that the competition of outside firms will no longer be a factor.

Here's a Chance for Club Boys

The following clipping from the Progressive Farmer should interest Franklin County boys:

A four-year scholarship in agriculture to North Carolina State College, worth $600, will be given by the educational bureau of the Chilean Nitrate of Soda to the boy growing the most corn on five acres of land, using nitrate of soda as the sole source of nitrogen. The money is now at the College on interest and will be given to the winner in four equal payments, including interest, at the beginning of each College year. The money can be used only towards defraying expenses in a course of agriculture, and any boy who can pass the entrance requirements for the freshman class in September, 1926, can enter the contest.

Club members are urged by J. M. Gray, State Agent in charge of Farm Demonstration Work, to take part in this contest and make an effort to win the scholarship.
