It may be true, as physicians claim, that more than 85 per cent of the population use only one eye. We, for one, are afraid to risk more than that—with women's styles what they are.

Overdoing?

Hurry, Worry and Overwork Bring Heavy Strain.

MODERN life throws a heavy burden on our bodily machinery. The eliminative organs, especially the kidneys, are apt to become sluggish. Retention of excess uric acid and other poisonous waste often gives rise to a dull, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backaches and headaches. That the kidneys are not functioning perfectly is often shown by burning or scanty passage of secretions. More and more people are learning to assist their kidneys by the occasional use of Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. Ask your neighbor!

Two Pictures of the Woman of Tomorrow

In a recent interview, Mme Alexandra Kollantay, the Soviet Minister to Mexico, said:

"The modern woman, the self-supporting professional woman, cannot allow love to take first place in her life. The modern woman is learning to subdue her emotions to reason, to master her tenderer feelings, and to put business and work before sentiment. There will be no flappers, because flappers are drones. There will be no Don Juans, or Lord Byrons, for the simple reason that women will not have time for them."

Now, all of us will be struck by a certain hallowiness in these observations and the lack of an understanding of human nature, but the thing that interests us particularly is just how men would react to this new specimen of womanhood.

What is the ideal woman in the American man's mind? Is she the successful, independent business woman who can turn a deal with the best of her male competitors? Is she a candidate for a political office? Is she the author of the year's best seller? Is she a career seeker in any of the branches open to the women of America today?

Or is she the woman of charm and grace, ministering tenderly, devotedly to the needs of her home, her husband and her children—and putting love before everything else?

Another Picture

Another important interview was given about the same time by Senor Alejandro Cesar, Nicaraguan minister to the United States. He said:

"The ideal woman of Nicaragua is not the governor of a state. She is not photographed casting her ballot for public officials, nor is she the head of a real estate firm. No ballot or political career can help her to be more than she is today—a charming figure on a moonlit balcony—a rose in her hair and a great love in her heart."

The balcony and rose are figures of speech—to Americans at least—colorful, yes—but not essential in the ideal woman of the American man. The picture painted in colors deep down in the heart of every man—regardless of his country—is the picture of the home-maker. That is the ideal that he cultivates.

Who wants to live in a world where there are no gay, irresponsible laughing little flappers—even if they are drones? Perhaps the flapper of today is too frivolous, possible she is wayward and unable to concentrate seriously on any great subject—not that we believe that—but even if it were so, isn't she preferable to the humorless grind conceived by Mme Kollantay? Who would want to live in a world where women are so intent on their struggle for economic independence that they had no inclination to listen to pretty speeches under the moon?

Try This Test—Maybe

Isn't the picture presented by Senor Alejandro Cesar a far more inviting one?

To get a little light on the subject you might ask your male relatives—or, if you have a husband, ask him. Ask him whether he would have you leaning over the moonlit balcony or over the executive desk. My belief is that if you are a woman with a great love in your heart you will be told you are perfectly satisfactory as you are. But if you are a woman with your whole heart in your career, placing love second to it, perhaps it will be wiser not to ask any questions at all. For you might put notions in your husband's head that life was cheating him of something that he might find elsewhere were he to look for it.

Attention Poultry Raisers

Are you planning to build any new poultry houses this summer? Now is the time to do so for a concrete floor should have at least a month to dry out. If you wait until fall the houses are quite certain not to be ready when you need them. What happens is this: The pullets come into production while still on the range. Moving pullets that are laying is almost sure to mean an upset in their production and very apt to force them into a partial or complete moult similar to a yearling hen. It will mean a loss in egg production just when egg prices are the best.

Before proceeding to build a hen house, let's make sure that we have a desirable location for it. Good soil, drainage is of prime importance; it may be secured by building the house on high ground or by tilling the land around the house. Locating on a soil that will grow good crops is particularly desirable for it helps to purify the soil and does away with the green food problem for a greater part of the year. Avoid building in an air pocket where frost comes early and fogs collect. Do not have the house or the ground in front of the house shaded by trees for it keeps the house and the ground damp. Let the birds get into the shade away from the house.

The size of house you will want to build will largely depend on how many birds you plan to keep. A large house holding good many birds is cheaper to construct and easier to take care of. One man can look after a certain number of units in a day almost regardless of the size of the unit. Convenience in arrangement and the accessibility of location will cut down the amount of labor required. The labor problem is an extremely important one. The house should afford ample sunlight and fresh air, be free of drafts, dry, and prove easy to clean or, in other words, be conducive to the health of your stock. Have it roomy: we generally figure to allow four square feet of floor space per hen.

Are you feeding your pullets so that they will be fully matured and ready to come into laying early this fall? Stunted, undersized, poorly nourished birds will prove to be a bunch of boarders all next winter when feed is high in price and egg prices are good. Ful-O-Pep Growing Mash is a scientific combination of just the things that a pullet must have to build strong, large bones, firm flesh and good plumage. It is especially prepared to use right at the time when pullets are developing their egg-producing organs. Pullets that get Ful-O-Pep Growing Mash grow into good layers of large, sound, well-shaped eggs provided they are fed the Ful-O-Pep Way through the laying period.
