sure the committee on rules will report favorably a special rule providing for early consideration of the measure.

Mr. Speaker, the McNary-Haugen bill is, after all, but an experiment. After it becomes a law, it is quite probable that certain amendments may be found desirable. Those who oppose legislation of this character may as well understand that the fight for farm relief has just begun. I submit that those who have opposed legislation for farm relief may well pause and consider now. There are gentlemen, members on both sides of the center aisle who represent agricultural districts and who know that there is no prosperity amongst millions of farmers in this Nation. If the efforts of these men are not successful in this session of Congress, the fight will be resumed in the December session. If they are not successful in the December session, the fight will be resumed in the next Congress. The fight will never end until there is legislation which will inject some measure of prosperity into the agriculture of this Nation, or until our present vicious, unjust, and un-American economic system is changed by law. This system has stood so long that no one can reasonably hope for a change in the very near future. Therefore, those who know that agriculture is to a large degree stagnant throughout the Nation must unite for some legislation which will bring measurable relief.

After all, Mr. Speaker, we are only asking for justice. Some years ago there was a great man in the White House who had a way of coining phrases which people could not forget. That man was Theodore Roosevelt. (Applause.) I am proud to number myself as one of his friends. He frequently made use of a phrase of two words which people cannot help remembering whenever the name of Theodore Roosevelt is mentioned. These two words were "square deal." Here today, in my humble way, I am asking only for a square deal for the farmers of America. These men are not asking for a subsidy. They are only asking that inasmuch as the manufacturer is protected inasmuch as the railroad is permitted to exact a profitable return, that they, too, shall be considered by the Congress in the legislation which the Congress enacts. Inasmuch as Congress by legislation has given to the manufacturer a profitable market, the farmers of America have a right to ask that Congress legislate in order to enable them to dispose of their surplus crop at a fair profit. You have given the manufacturer a market in which there is no destructive competition in the protective laws you have passed. The farmer has a right to ask, indeed, has the right to demand, that Congress should also help him find a profitable market for the surplus product of his soil. In making this request, I say in the name of Theodore Roosevelt, the farmer is only asking a square deal. He demands nothing more, he has a right to expect nothing else.

I can not resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, without referring to another measure, which I submit, ought to have consideration before this session of Congress adjourns. I shall only take a moment of time. I refer to the disabled emergency Army officers' retirement bill. Let me give you the parliamentary history of this measure. In the Sixty-seventh Congress the so-called Tyson-Fitzgerald bill passed the Senate by a vote of 50 to 14, in the Sixty-eighth Congress it passed the Senate by a vote of 63 to 14, in the Seventieth Congress it passed the Senate February 15, 1928, without a record vote.

Mr. Speaker, since the armistice was signed 500 of these wounded officers have passed into the great beyond. If we are going to do anything, Mr. Speaker, in this regard, it ought to be done now. Now, I submit, in view of the legislative history of this measure, it should be included in the legislative program of this House. Let us meet the issue squarely. Let us vote, this measure up or down. The measure should not be defeated by strangulation. Parliamentary tactics certainly should not prevent consideration.

Mr. Hammer. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Pou. I yield.

Mr. Hammer. As a member of the Rules Committee, may we not have a special rule to consider the bill?

Mr. Pou. You will have at least one vote, and I believe you will have a rule from the Committee on Rules whenever the request is made. I will say to my colleague from North Carolina that in the last Congress the Committee on Rules granted a special rule providing for the consideration of this eminently just measure, but the rule was agreed to during the closing days of the last Congress, and for some reason action was not taken.

Remember, gentlemen, these are the officers who led the charges in the great World War. Their wounds bear testimony to the part they took in the struggle to save civilization to the world. They are the men who led the charge at Chateau Thierry on that hot July day, a charge that was followed up with other charges which never ended until the Germans were brought to their knees.

Mr. Hudspeth. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Pou. Yes.

Mr. Hudspeth. Is the gentleman referring to the Fitzgerald-Tyson bill?

Mr. Pou. I am.

Mr. Hudspeth. I think there is hardly anyone in my district who has not petitioned me in favor of that bill.

Mr. Pou. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that there has not been a minute since the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill passed the Senate the first time when it would not have received a majority vote in this House if a vote could have been had. There are only a little more than 3,000 of these officers living; originally there were thirty-five hundred. Let us not sidetrack this measure, but let us pass it if we are going to pass it at all before more of these men die. Because of their wounded condition the mortality among these officers is larger than it would otherwise be. Officers in the Navy from civil life enjoy the privilege of retirement similar to those embodied in the Fitzgerald-Tyson bill. Let there be no discrimination against similar officers of the Army. The necessary appropriation will not be large. As I have said, already 500 of these officers have died. Let us, before this session ends, pass the act of justice to the remaining 3,000. (Applause.) 4.13-11

WILL PLANT TOBACCO SAY FARM REPORTS

Raleigh, April 2.—An item of significance to farmers of North Carolina is contained in the recent government report of intentions to plant by some 50,000 farmers of this and other states which shows the acreage to flue-cured tobacco will likely be increased over ten percent this season.

"The governmental agencies are not allowed to collect information as to the intentions of farmers to plant cotton and we have no accurate means of knowing whether the acreage will be expanded, yet we do know that tobacco will be increased by 10.5 percent and this will likely cause a serious situation this fall," says I. O. Schaub, dean of the school of agriculture at State College. Indications from private sources show that the cotton acreage will also be slightly increased but when we add an increased acreage of 10 percent to that of from 15 to 20 percent for last year with tobacco, we shall likely suffer from low prices this fall. Cigarette consumption is increasing by about 9 percent each year but the burley tobacco growers indicate that they will also increase their acreage by 34 percent. Since burley is also used in cigarette manufacture, these two increases will certainly give an excessively crop.

In a study of the intentions to plant report, Dean Schaub finds that the corn acreage will be increased slightly in North Carolina. Hay will remain as for last year when the farmers made a good increase and peanuts will be increased by about eight percent in this State and 12 percent as an average for the peanut belt. Sweet potatoes will be increased in acreage by five percent and Irish potatoes by 12 percent. Only average prices will probably be secured with these two crops. Mr. Schaub states that the average increase for all the main crops, except cotton, will be three percent larger than the acreage harvested in 1927.

In general, the intentions to plant report follows the outlook for farm crops in 1928 as issued by the college during February.
