tape line, stakes and axe to be used in geometric measuring. The boys on entering the shop, found it to be locked, called Tommie (the negro janitor) to unlock it. Tommie said, "What dim gals down 'er got in dere heads dis morning?" One of the boys replied, "Why Tommie, they are going to measure a post without going up it." "Huh, dey can't do dat Mr. Buddie." Buddie replied, "Yest they can Tommie, Miss Cline said we could." "Wal Mr. Buddie, I can't believe it; dat thing sounds mighty shaky." After unlocking the shop door and the boys secured their necessary need for this geometric work, Tommie, with a smile from ear to ear watched from a distance with great enthusiasm on how this work could and would be done.

In this class there are eleven students taking geometry. There were before leaving groups assigned to work together. They worked in groups as follows: No. 1—Ruby Lee Hayes, Gladys Mullen, and Ruby Mullen; No. 2—Ludie Hayes Pattle Lou Averant, and Elizabeth Beddingfield; No. 3—Della Mitchell, Emma Holmes, and Bleeker Mullen; No. 4—Geo. (Buddie) Fuller and Leburn (Abe) Pearce.

Through these methods of geometric measuring the advanced class finds this work interesting.

"Buddie" and "Abe" Geometry Class Modern education recognizes the necessity of a mathematic fitness of the individual to meet the requirements of life. Its greatest purpose is to enable students to make a living, and to directly stimulate the mental ability; to help to a realization of the creative power of thinking accurately.

Students who do not make use of Geometry as a means toward mental training will miss one of the strongest allies in the field of mental training.

For the past week, we have been studying proportions. Tuesday and Wednesday, we tested some of these proportional propositions by measuring the shadows of trees, and posts on the campus. In terms of proportions and length of shadows we found the height of trees, and other objects on the campus.

The Junior-Senior banquet was given Feb. eight at eight o'clock. The juniors were very glad to have as their guests the seniors, the faculty, and other visitors. The senior colors, green and white, and the irreflower, daisy, were emphasized in the decoration which was carried out with great effect. The place cards were white daisies with green backgrounds, the flowers were green fern leaves, while the lights were made into very attractive daisies with orange centers.

The welcome address was given by Sallie Lou Ayscue, president of the Junior class, welcomes to the guests and their responses were given between courses.

Society News
 The Sidney Lanier Society has its regular meeting each Friday with interesting programs. The members are wide awake and making an effort to make each program the best. We are striving to make our programs worth while, by each one on program taking part and making real preparation for the numbers.

Friday, Feb. 21, a George Washington program was given. Interesting talks and papers were well given. Friday, Feb. 23 the chief number was a debate, "Resolved: that Colonel Eyrd is greater than Columbus." This created much enthusiasm. Splendid talks were given on both the negative and affirmative. The affirmative won.
