"TARZAN AND HIS MATE"

PLAYS AT LOUISBURG THEATRE, JUNE 28th-29th

Most Thrilling Film That's Ever Been Made—A Thousand New Breath Taking Thrills—Dwarfing the Hair-Raisers in "Tarzan, the Ape Man."

Hundreds of wild beasts, including a herd of elephants, nearly a hundred lions, a rhinoceros, crocodiles, monkeys, gazelles, wildebeeste, boa-constrictors and many other rare jungle specimens are all in "Tarzan and His Mate" which comes to the Louisburg Theatre, Thursday and Friday, June 28th and 29th.

The exhilarating thrill of relief from the problems of daily life is offered with a "punch" in every minute of adventure in "Tarzan and His Mate," new picture of jungle hazards. Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan are re-united in the new film.

Based upon the adventures of the famous fictional character created by Edgar Rice Burroughs, the story has been developed to pack even more human drama on to the screen than did "Tarzan, the Ape Man," the picture which broke attendance records at theatres in all parts of the country.

Crocodile Battle

The new picture has animal thrill scenes that leave an audience gasping, including such breath-taking action as a terrific fight between Weissmuller and a giant crocodile at a depth of more than thirty feet under water. A special camera compartment was used that brings the spectacle to within a few feet of the mad combat with perfect visibility.

Herds of elephants are shown running amuck among hundreds of natives on safari for ivory. Nearly fifty lions are turned loose among the players for a climax to the picture that brings a tingling scalp to every member of the audience.

A tender love story is woven through the jungle thrills providing a concentration of sympathetic interest on Weissmuller and Miss O'Sullivan that makes each one of their dangers seem vividly real. Their action is carried on from the first of the "Tarzan" stories in sound with a second safari of white men attempting to take hundreds of pounds of ivory from the sacred burial ground of the elephants. The efforts of "Tarzan" to protect the ivory and his final success leads to a smashing climax.

NOTICE TO COTTON FARMERS IN FRANKLIN COUNTY

County Agent E. J. Morgan stated to the Times this week that "Practically all Producer's Copy of Cotton Contracts have been mailed to the producers this week, along with card giving each their allotted acres to plant this year with yield per acre that can be sold tax free this fall.

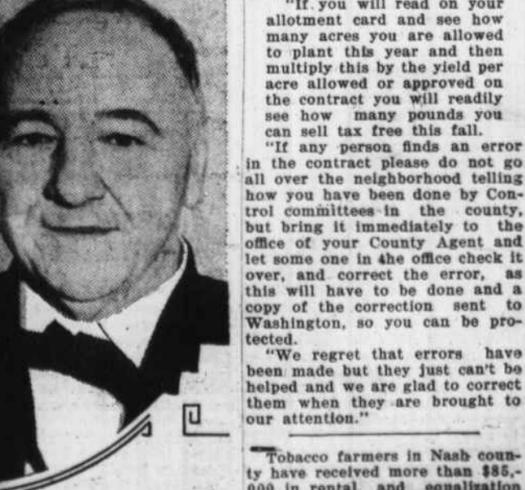

"Since the contracts were mailed out quite a number of people have been in the office for information on how to tell what is meant by the different figures on the contract.

"The only misleading thing about the contract is line (f) on the bottom of page 4. The pounds listed at the end of this line does not mean the number of pounds you can sell, this means the number of pounds that you will receive at least 1c per pound as parity next fall.

"If you will read on your allotment card and see how many acres you are allowed to plant this year and then multiply this by the yield per acre allowed or approved on the contract you will readily see how many pounds you can sell tax free this fall.

"If any person finds an error in the contract please do not go all over the neighborhood telling how you have been done by Control committees in the county, but bring it immediately to the office of your County Agent and let some one in the office check it over, and correct the error, as this will have to be done and a copy of the correction sent to Washington, so you can be protected.

"We regret that errors have been made but they just can't be helped and we are glad to correct them when they are brought to our attention."

HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS
Ambassador to Mexico, who reviewed the soldiers at Fort Bragg on Wednesday morning.

Need More Advertising To Conquer Depression

New York, June 18.—Advertising men must hold themselves at least partly responsible for the depression, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace told 500 delegates to the 30th annual convention of the Advertising Federation of America here tonight.

To fulfill its place in the modern American social structure, the secretary said, advertising must create a demand for goods which will make unemployment and the underconsumption of national production impossible.

The secretary spoke on human desires and the possibility of their stimulation through advertising.

Under-Consumption

"It seems almost as if desire had failed us in recent years," Wallace asserted. "A terrible thing—under-consumption—has saddled upon us.

"That would suggest that advertising has, in part at least, failed. It is a situation that can be remedied. I want you to think whether something can be done which will again stimulate the human desire for the things which we produce so that we can all live in greater comfort than ever before and consume the things which we now have."

Advertising can and must aid solution of the problem of unemployment, the secretary said. It must stimulate people to buy what they can afford to buy so that factories can get to work and provide labor for all.

Wallace suggested a minimum salary in the United States ought to be about $2,500 a year. If all workers received approximately that amount, he said, a distribution of wealth would be effected which would aid in consumption.

Shoot Too High

The secretary criticized "much of our present advertising" as aimed only at persons in comparatively high salary brackets. The bulk of it, he thought, should be aimed at those who labor for a small wage for they constitute the great bulk of the consuming population.
