New York--For Franklin County's farm population, 1963 proved to be a better year, by and large, than it was for farmers in many parts of the country.

Although some local operators barely held their own in the year, others, especially those with well-equipped, commercial-size farms, ended up on the plus side.

They were able to raise more livestock and produce a larger volume of crops than before, despite the smaller amount of land under cultivation. Much of this grain was offset, however, by the drop in prices for farm products and cattle.
