Men, Birds, Fish Move South For Winter

Men, birds and fish have much in common. Take the matter of seasonal temperatures, for example. With the approach of cold weather, those creatures that are able to do so move south for the winter.

The migration habits of fish, mainly the saltwater varieties, are as well defined as those of waterfowl or human sun-seekers, comment the fishing enthusiasts at Mercury outboards.

This nomadic trait causes fishermen either "feasts" or "famine," depending on the coastal angler's ability and inclination to follow his favorite sport to the temperate feeding grounds.

The "big prizes"—tuna, sailfish, marlin and swordfish—all drift south, some remaining in waters accessible to winter anglers, others crossing the equator to distant points.

The various and wide-ranging members of the Atlantic mackerel family, which migrate north in the summer, usually take up, winter residence along the lower Florida coast. Pacific mackerel seek out the depths in cold weather, nearly disappearing altogether.

Except for a few resident fish which remain in southern Florida, winter sees almost

Doctors Talk

By Rembert Benjamin, M.D.

A very commonly encountered lesion of the skin, around the lips, is a localized virus infection known to the general public as fever blisters. Fever blisters are caused by a virus known as Herpes labialis, because of its affinity to infect the lip area or on the lips themselves.

These infections are usually noticed accompanying systemic virus infections such as influenza, virus pneumonia or the common cold, even though the cause of the fever blister is a distinct and separate strain of virus than that of the infection it accompanies.

The lesion usually begins as a localized outcropping of small blisters, along with a red, inflamed appearance to the skin. The blisters may drain very easily, leaving a raw, exuding area which very readily tends to become encrusted as the healing process ensues.

The length of involvement with these small ulcerations is highly variable and one must be careful in preventing the development of a secondary infection in this raw, weeping sore. High fever does not cause these lesions but there usually is some degree of fever during the time of appearance which results from a coexisting infection rather than having a direct relationship to the fever blisters themselves.

Some people, it seems, are particularly predisposed to chronic and recurring involvement with these very annoying sores. What makes these people more susceptible is not entirely understood. Some preventative measures are attempted, one of which is to re-vaccinate the individual with smallpox vaccine.
