the Franklinton area. Durham Hosiery, an old established firm in neighboring Durham, decided to move its operation to Franklinton. A 70,000 sq. ft. building has been recently completed and the expected 200 people to be employed there are now being hired.

And this week, ID announced the plans of Rishel furniture to locate on the land once viewed by Sylvania. A 117,000 sq. ft. plant will be built on that site. The firm will employ 150 persons at the start.

It has been a long road for Industrial Development since the idea first took form here in 1956. Franklin's program has been a model for a number of other communities. The 13 new industries that have been aided by the Franklin ID Commission is well above the average for any areas. And according to reliable reports, this is just the beginning. The end is not yet in sight.
