T & C Garden Club Tours Hillsborough

Members of the Town and Country Garden Club travel-ed to Hillsborough Saturday, April 26, for the fourth biennial spring tour sponsored by the Hillsborough Historical Society.

Several points on the tour included the "Commandant's House of the Hillsborough Military Academy." Mr. and Mrs. Lucious Cheshire have recently restored this house which was built by Col. Charles Courtney Tew in 1859. The square two story brick structure resembles a mediaeval castle with its crenellated roof and towers at each corner. It was used as a military school until the Civil War, at which time all the student cadets entered the Army and the school was closed and never reopened. A life-size portrait of Bishop Joseph Blount Cheshire hangs over the living room mantel. This is the first time this house has been open to visi-

"Moore's Pleasure" is the most sophisticated in design of Hillsborough's old houses and is owned and restored by Dr. and Mrs. H. W. Moore. This house was built from the famous Plate 37 of Robert Morris "Rural Architecture" (London 1750). The house has three pedimented units.

"Old Burwell School" was a school for females in a spacious frame house built ca. 1821. The gardens feature very fine Sugar maples, lindens, and sycamores.

"The Garden at Heartsease" contains a quaint boxwood garden with borders of spring flowers and bulbs, centered with an interesting wellhouse. The box bushes at the entrance are well over 100 years old. The flagstone terrace at the rear was built from foundation stones of the old coach house at Burnside. Tradition says that Gov. Thomas Burke may have built the central part of the house before 1810. A Tory band captured Gov. Burke on the steps of this house on September 16, 1781. Burke's daughter, Mary, planted the Mary Burke rose which still grows and blooms in the gar-

"Sans Souci" is an extremely handsome plantation house of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Latta. Sans Souci still shows organization and pattern of plantation life. The house was built before 1800 and is furnished with fine antique furniture some of which is original with the house. An especially handsome silver tea server of English origin is a very valuable feature of the dining room with its huge table, bunt board, and china press and a dutch cupboard laden with old china, glass and silver. In the yard are magnificent Southern Magnolia trees.
"Green Hill," so named in 1750, came alive again in 1968 when it was restored by Mr. and Mrs. James H. Coman. It was built around 1750 on a land grant from the King of England to Charles Wilson Johnston.

"St. Matthew's Episcopal Church," a church of England edifice, was built before 1768 and burned in 1793. The present church was organized and built in 1824.

All the guides and lecturers were dressed in the colonial costume.

Arrangements for this year's annual tour were made by Mrs. Lawrence G. Bare-foot and Mrs. Frank A. Read,

The Measure Of a Free Man

JESS RALEY Godsden, Ale.

Freedom is many things to many people, but by and large a free man is restrained by no force out-side himself. ¶ He is uninhibited by just laws because his own sense of justice embraces the spirit as well as the letter of the law. He is prompt to condemn and resist any law that imposes an injustice on any individual. ¶ He is not a slave to his profession because he takes pride in giving full measure for remuneration received. By giving extra time and thought to his work, he gains better understanding of it. ¶ Family and social responsibilities are accepted as a joyous privilege. ¶ Since the free man is not seeking an unfair advantage, he votes for the candidate most likely to respect the rights and dignity of every individual and least likely to bow to any pressure group.
