FALL-MINDED — Double woven for warmth yet cotton-comfortable is this belted coat dress with soft pleats around the waist. In red and navy box checks, the winter-weight cotton dress is by Roth-Le Cover of California.

Cotton Takes On Four-Season Status

Time was when a cotton dress was something you wore in the summertime only. The seasons haven't changed—but cotton certainly has.

While cotton has always been the most comfortable fabric to wear in the sticky hot days of summer, it's also become the most comfortable thing you can don during the brisk days of fall as well as the steam-heated days of winter.

New weaves and heavier constructions of cotton fabric have been a factor in bringing this about. The double-wovens especially have given cotton its new year-round status.

A double-woven cotton is just what it sounds like — a fabric woven in two thicknesses, back to back, resulting in a reversible pattern.

Besides giving the fabric a handsome three-dimensional look, the double weave is an insulating factor, keeping you warm in cool weather — and because it's "breathable" cotton — keeping you comfortable in warm weather.

As for fashion appeal, double-woven cottons have taken the fancy of fashion designers. They like the fabric's body and its rich, sculptured-looking surface.

Patterns are woven into these cottons, and they all seem to have a timeless, any-season appeal. Checks, plaids, sharp defined blocks of color, mosaic and tile patterns, diagonal criss-cross stripes, squares and circles—anything geometric, in fact, looks especially attractive in double-woven cotton.

A fabric with body and dimension of pattern, double-woven cotton is still light and comfortable. Because of this combination of qualities, it's extensively used for belted shirts with full skirts, for coats, dresses, jacket and dress combinations, and handsome coat and dress ensembles.

The color palette of double-wovens leans to the any-season basics, like black and white, brown, beige, and white, or navy, red, and white.

WINTER COTTON — Double woven cotton in a striking black and white geometric design shapes an easy-fitting style that's perfect for winter wear. Buckled in silver, the dress has silver buttons at the cuffs and shoulders. By Generalities of California.

Totem-pole carving, though a dying art today, probably is a relatively recent practice. The first totems are believed to have been erected less than two centuries ago.

Getting The Jump On School Wardrobes

For the young back-to-school set, jumpers have the jump on all other children's wear styles this fall.

Always a favorite with school girls — from kindergarten age to college co-ed — the jumper is especially appropriate for the fast-growing grade-schooler.

For one thing, it's designed for roummy comfort, and has easy-fitting lines. Moreover, one jumper can turn into a wardrobe of school outfits when it's worn with switch-about blouses in crisp white cotton or colorful plaids and calicos.

Simply designed jumpers are among the easiest styles to stitch up at home.

The latest patterns offer many variations on the basic jumper theme. For instance, you'll see pattern versions of the jumper with deep-cut armholes, a currently popular design and one that's ideal for active youngsters.

Then there's the zip-front jumper, easy for the very young back-to-schooler to put on. Scoop-neck styles are also quite new-looking, and they're perfect for showing off ruffle-front blouses.

Favorite fabrics for sewing fall jumpers are comfortable, easy-to-care-for cottons. Corduroy and quilted cotton are at the top of the list this fall. New types of corduroy — like "thick 'n thin" — are stylish sew-it-yourself choices, as are the quaint "country" or peasant motifs in quilted cottons.

When sewing with any kind of corduroy—whether it's wide wale or no wale — remember that corduroy is a napped fabric. It's important to lay pattern pieces out so that all are running in the same direction.

This insures that the fabric pile will go in the same direction on every pattern piece. The direction of the pile in napped fabrics affects the color of the completed garment.

When the pile runs up, the fabric will have a dark rich color. When it's running down on the garment, you will see a lighter, shadowy color.

To determine the direction of the pile, run your hand down the corduroy's ribs or wales. If they're smooth to the touch, the pile is running down. If rough, the pile is going up.

Sewing with quilted cottons also calls for special cutting instructions. Pattern pieces should be laid out and cut so the stitching lines of the quilting match at the side seams. All pattern pieces should be cut running the same direction and matched line for line at all joinings before sewing.

HEAD OF CLASS—Singer sewing experts say the cotton corduroy jumper will head the parade of back-to-school styles this fall. This zip-front version with new deep-cut armholes is made from Simplicity Pattern 8375. It tops a checked cotton blouse made by Simplicity Pattern 8226. Fabrics and patterns from Singer stores.

COUNTRY COUSIN—The country look in quilted cotton prints is popular for back-to-school wear. This kindergarten coed wears a quilted jumper and long-sleeved cotton blouse made from McCall's Patterns 2058 and 9675. Fabric and patterns available at Singer stores where fabrics are sold.
