

Appreciation Day

Thursday, November 13, was set aside at the Burlington Industries Franklinton Fabrics Plant as a day of special recognition in honor of its employees. The fine service and loyal support of each employee has resulted in continued improvement in Plant operations during the past year, and management took the occasion to express appreciation for a job well done.

As meal time approached, all production machinery was stopped, and employees were invited to "come and get it."

Barbecued pork and fried chicken, potato salad, cole slaw, hush puppies, pickles and olives, assorted pies, coffee, tea, and soft drinks were served, and everyone had their fill.

All retired employees were invited to the dinner, and many were able to be there to visit old friends and enjoy the fellowship.

Management stated that "Employee Appreciation Day was just another way of recognizing the merits of Burlington's most valuable asset - its people."

Work Begins On Greenhouse

School officials connected with the construction of the new greenhouse at Bunn High School observe a trade student laying the last course of cement blocks for the building's foundation. Principal, Mr. Kelly, left; Trades teacher, Mr. Harris, center; Horticulture teacher, Mr. Shearin, right, are very pleased that they will soon be ready to assemble the fiberglass sides. Mr. Kelly hopes the building will soon be completed.

According to Mr. Shearin, the greenhouse will be used to teach courses in plant life. He plans for the biology class to have a section of the building for their research projects. He feels this will add improved instruction in the agriculture and science classes.

Drinking Driver, Drinking Pedestrian Blamed For Street, Highway Deaths

Chapel Hill - Seventy-eight percent of the automobile drivers killed in single-car vehicle crashes in North Carolina during September and October were under the influence of alcohol, according to figures released here today (Tuesday) by the State Medical Examiner.

Dr. Page Hudson said the data was compiled from studies conducted by the Medical Examiner System and the Department of Motor Vehicles.

Not only were drinking drivers indicted in the report, but drinking pedestrians.

In multiple car crashes, seven (33 percent) of the 21 tested were under the influence, three (14 percent) had been drinking and 11 (52 percent) were sober.

The sample of 21 represents the approximately 50 drivers killed in crashes of two or more cars or trucks, the report said.

Criteria used were: Blood alcohol concentration of 100 milligrams of alcohol per 100 milliliters (0.1) of blood or higher was considered sufficient to influence a driver. The level to make a person "drunk" was 250 milligrams per 100 milliliters (0.25).

Dr. Hudson explained that about 15 ounces of liquor consumed in a three-hour period by a 200-pound person is generally sufficient to make a person "drunk".

Seventy-five percent of the pedestrians killed in the state during the same period were either drinking or "drunk", the report said.

Of 34 pedestrians killed (age 15 and up), eight were tested for blood alcohol concentration. Five were "drunk", one had been drinking and two were sober, the report said.

"The impaired judgment, the slowed reaction time, the sleepiness, the obscured vision of those drinking and driving, or even drinking and walking, would appear to indicate alcohol as a major factor in cause of death on North Carolina's streets and highways," Dr. Hudson said.

During the two-month period, 95 drivers were killed in single-car crashes. Of this group, 28 were under the influence of alcohol concentration. Of these 28 drivers tested, 22 were under the influence of alcohol (blood alcohol of 0.1 or higher). One driver (four percent) had a level less than 0.1 while five of the 28 had not been drinking.
