

Roan Mountain has a post office. The Wilmington Star says "Danbury has the mumps!" She is not dangerous. Col. H. C. Jones will be Chief Marshal at the 20th of May Charlotte celebration. Seventy steamers run from New Orleans to European ports, but not one to South America. Mrs. C. P. Spencer is announced as the editor of the Chapel Hill Ledger. Mrs. S. is already popular as an editor. J. T. PATRICK, Esq., editor "Pee Dee Herald," has also an Advertising Agency, of the due bill plan. We can't make it worth a cent. MAD DOGS.—The newspapers report mad dogs in several different parts of the State. There were five persons bitten by one in Catawba county about a week ago. The Winston Leader wants a penal colony—a sort of Siberia—and mentions Alaska as the place for our thieves and rascals. Send them on. Gov. Jarvis has respited the Chapel Hill burglars. They were to be hung to-morrow. He has sent them word to prepare for the extreme penalty of the law for Friday the 10th of May. The organ of the colored Baptist, the "National Monitor," tells its people to stand their ground against the "exodus"—to work and pray where they are and trust in God for the rest. Right. Over twenty revenue offenders were convicted at the recent Federal Court in Statesville, and sentenced to imprisonment in county jails. Judge Dick passed through on his return to Greensboro, Tuesday. Frank P. Wilson, of Yancy, in Nashville, Tenn., under the assumed name of Boyd, confessed that he had murdered a revenue officer in North Carolina. He was out of cash and wanted to be sent back home at the public charge as a prisoner. He had killed nobody. COCKING has made "the greatest speech of his life"—in fact revived the days of Daniel Webster and Henry Clay. So say Roscoe's radical friends. Read the Baltimore Sun's review of the speech and then laugh. Cox, who lately killed Alston, in Atlanta, is on trial in that city. He has 13 able lawyers to defend him. The State is represented by eight. One day spent in selecting six jurors. Not much excitement. We regret to see that the proprietor of the Raleigh Observer has made an assignment of his entire establishment. If at the end of thirty days it is not relieved it will be sold. The Observer says it has 3,000 subscribers who have not paid for the paper. No wonder it is in trouble. We predict that the negro will never be left alone to work out his destiny in this country in peace. The Yankees will either make money or votes out of him. For the sake of votes they have deluded thousands from their happy homes in the South to wander off into Kansas, where poverty and wretchedness are destroying them. The Missouri Legislature has passed an Act levying a tax of one dollar on those carrying pistols. It is estimated it will raise $200,000 revenue.—It is suggested that annual license for the privilege of carrying concealed weapons would be better, in effect, if not productive of more revenue. There will be a colored man's convention at Vicksburg, May 5th, to consider the exodus movement. The Governor of Mississippi and other distinguished citizens of the State will attend, and good is expected to come of it. The negroes themselves do not understand the movement. A Frenchman in New York in a fit of jealousy administered prussic acid to his two children, two and four years old, and to himself, causing his own death and that of his oldest child in a few minutes. His wife had refused to see him, but allowed the children to be taken to him. Strangers at depots and boat landings should beware of taking babies to hold while their owners step back a moment to mail a letter or dispatch a telegram. The owner of the cherub does not always return to claim the precious darling, and it is left in the arms of the obliging person who took it to hold just for a minute or two. The Wilmington Star reports a case of this sort happening at the depot in that city recently, the lady dupe deciding to take the baby to her home at Magnolia, and do a mother's part by it. SPOTS ON THE SUN.—The Philadelphia Times advertises to the fact that the time is approaching when numerous spots (some of them large) may be seen on the sun. Some of them are visible now, and within the next two years many more will come into view, perhaps to the naked eye. Spots heretofore observed were measured and one of them estimated at 50,000 miles in diameter; others at from 29,000 to 74,000 miles. Herschel supposed the average temperature of the earth lower in the years when the greater number of spots appear on the sun.

VETO OF THE ARMY BILL.—Yesterday's mail brought the announcement that the President had vetoed the army appropriation bill. His message accompanying the return of the bill to Congress sets forth two principal reasons for refusing to sign it, to wit: the clause repealing the election laws which give to the President discretion to employ troops when Congressional elections are being held; and the attaching to an appropriation bill important legislation which should stand or fall on its own merits. If anything, he is more opposed to the repeal of the law objected to by the Democrats than to the manner in which they have sought to accomplish it. It remains to be seen what course the Democrats will now pursue. The passage of the Army Appropriation Bill was one of the main causes for convening Congress in extra session. It is the bill which the Democrats in caucus determined should carry with it the repealing clause which has now caused the veto, which event it was said would signalize an immediate adjournment of Congress. It is now said a long and exciting session was expected, but this is doubtless mere conjecture. HOMESTEAD AND BANKRUPTCY.—Judge Dick recently made a decision in U. S. Court, at Greensboro, which will probably settle the question of validity of homesteads held under the State Constitution of 1868. He says: "The homestead provision in the Constitution of North Carolina, Article x., section 2, cannot be made available against debts contracted previous to the adoption of said Constitution in 1868." But "when homesteads have been duly assigned and confirmed in bankruptcy proceedings, I am inclined to think that such adjudicated homestead rights will be recognized and secured by the courts. He thereupon ordered a decree for the sale of lands in controversy before the court, wherein the plea of the defendants rested on the State Constitution of 1868 to protect them against creditors whose claims existed prior to the adoption of that Constitution. BURIED IN A MINE.—There was intense excitement at the coal mine of the Wilkesbarre and Lehigh Coal Company, Pa., on the morning of the 23d April, occasioned by the caving in of the earth, and shutting up seven men and boys 1200 feet below the surface. The men were thought to be half a mile from where the caving occurred, but the closing of the passage ways cut off their retreat and rescue. The excitement spread rapidly to other mines throughout the county, and brought to the scene thousands of persons, many of whom were willing helpers for the rescue of the unfortunate. Operations for cutting a way to the men were commenced without the loss of a moment, while the heart-rending cries of wives and sisters, lent energy to the wills of the toilers. The difficulties to be overcome were very great, but after desperate efforts continued through four days and nights, they were successful. The imprisoned men had subsisted on the body of a mule, and though they had suffered a great deal were delivered alive. The Wilmington Star reports a test case on the right of counties or cities to tax drummers. As tried there, the mayor decided in favor of the city. The drummer refused to pay the tax levied on him by the city, and he was put under arrest. He filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus and went before Judge Meares, who granted it, and dismissed the defendant. The city prayed an appeal. The city will press the case to a trial in the Supreme Court. The drummer pleads that the general law by the last General Assembly exempts him from municipal taxes. The city of Wilmington relies on the omission of a repealing clause to that Act. "THE BLUE LAWS."—We have a carefully written communication on this subject for our next, which takes issue with two of our correspondents—"More Anon" and "P." in regard to the real existence of the oft quoted New England code. The aim of the writer is to vindicate a denomination reflected on in the references made to the subject by our correspondents, and is therefore very cheerfully accorded a hearing through our columns. And as he is handling the subject ably, the general reader not familiar with the early history of the New England religions, will find much to instruct as well to amuse him. Mr. Turner, member of Congress from Kentucky, is represented as descended from the Turners of Rowan and Irell. He is a fearless sort of man, taking the liberty, occasionally, to speak his views about men and things in a very free way on his own personal responsibility. The Czar of Russia is admonished by the American press to dismiss his fears of being shot until his subjects learn how to shoot. The Czar probably makes due allowance for them but he is a little nervous, nevertheless, to be made the target while his fellows are practicing.

There is a terrible famine in Morocco, Africa. More than 13,000 persons have perished in the town of Mizpah Meccador. The famine takes in domestic animals as well as men. Congressman Russell has made a speech full of all bitterness against Southern Democrats. "The ascendancy of the Bourbon Democracy in the South," he says "is a menace to free institutions." "It means the denial of education of the masses and the active propagation of ignorance among them." "The Bourbon slave power" is "preparing to strike hands with the money power of the North for a common assault on the rights of labor." "White South whining and weeping over the lost cause," &c., &c., all of which only shows Mr. Russell's own personal unfitness for the place he fills. He represents no political element having existence in the State. Advice from Mr. Conkling. Baltimore Sun. More happy than Mrs. Dombey, Mr. Roscoe Conkling, the senior Senator from New York, has succeeded in "making an effort," and his friends and admirers unite to pronounce it "the greatest effort of his life." In fact some of them, parading the hyperbole of Mr. Blaine in calling Mr. Lincoln the greatest man the world has produced "for ten centuries," declare that Mr. Conkling's effort recalls the speeches of Clay, Webster and Calhoun, while Mr. Hamlin, who has been in the Senate since 1848, and it is said often sleeps through the speeches, waked up on this occasion to profess his belief that the New York Senator's oration was the greatest ever delivered in the capitol. Probably if Mr. Hamlin were to be closely interrogated in regard to this President's "great effort" it would be a somewhat familiar quotation from Pinafiore; but really it does not much matter, as Mr. Conkling's speech is not likely to change many votes. What he said contrasts rather strangely with other speeches made by him in recent years, and the moderation of which earned the commendation that they were "statesmanlike." Aside from the "great effort" of this speech, which may be set aside as only so much "padding"—two points in it are noticeable: One is, that Mr. Conkling, whose personal hostility to the head of the present administration is well known, seems to adapt the keynote of his speech to the reasonable assumption that President Hayes will not veto the army bill when it comes to him for his signature, and that it will help his own side of the quarrel to denounce the President, therefore, in advance as the accomplice of a treasonable party, and the refusal to veto the bill as that act of final heresy for which Mr. Hayes must forever lie under the ban of political excommunication. It is noticeable that every prominent opponent of the President's "great effort" in the South has made haste to draw the line of political fellowship at this bill, but Mr. Conkling outdoes them all. The bill itself, according to him, is reasonable; not to veto it is to make one's self a traitor to the Republican party. This idea runs all through Mr. Conkling's speech, and it is yoked with another, which has seemingly been borrowed from the late Thaddeus Stevens' repertoire, that the Southern States have no right to be represented in Congress except by "loyal" men. He pronounced it to be, in his sounding phrase, "injurious" for the Southern people to return to politics, and especially to affiliate themselves with the Democratic party, and so get a majority in both houses of Congress. The Southern people should go to work, and let politics alone. They should leave the management of the country's policies in the hands that now controlled it, and not attempt to obtain possession once more of the government and dominate the country. There was, perhaps, room enough for them at the national table—but it was not decorous that the South should be the McGregors at the table." Let the Southern people stay at home, dig, plant, sow—"short, go to work." "Drop sentiment and let material prosperity advance"—it is simply impertinence for Confederate brigadiers and late rebels to have political opinions and to vote to maintain them. Their function is to "hoe corn and dig potatoes," while statesmen of the Union enact laws for their government. This is not an exaggerated statement of the tone of Mr. Conkling's "effort." And yet it is not impossible that a people may work and have political opinions also. Undoubtedly, as he said, he spoke "without malice," his speech being but one part of a cunningly contrived piece of machinery now being constructed in Congress and elsewhere to "fire the Northern heart," and bring about a "solid North" in time for the next presidential election. The cool and rather contemptuous indifference with which the matter-of-fact constituents of the gentlemen who are so energetically shouting "revolution" at the capitol contemplate their exertions meet, however, be rather discouraging. Never before, perhaps, in the history of the world, were business men so eager to put their money in the four per cent. bonds of a nation convulsed by treason and quivering on the rugged edge of revolution. It is true that a lack of stir in business enterprises and industries may be one reason why so much money is found for investment in four per cent. bonds, but the spirit manifested by such as Mr. Conkling is not that which will tend to a revival of that which is wholesome in any quarter.
