The Indian War in Colorado.

The Omaha, (Nebraska) Herald is very severe upon the Federal authorities in connection with the outbreak of the Indians of Colorado. It says; "This is the old, old story, and such is the lower deep into which knavery and imbecility have plunged the Indian service, and such is the power of the banded brigands who control it, that this infamous system is perpetuated in spite of every intelligent protest that can be made to arrest and overthrow it. Let us not withhold a word that can express the indignation all must feel over the latest sacrifice of precious life that has been made that thieves and villians of high and low degree may riot and grow rich in robbing the best friends white men ever had on these borders. Such friends were the Utes. True to their fidelity at all times, they became friendly to us many years ago. The never violated their faith. Driven from their hunting grounds when they were not swindpeople by solemn engagement agreed to give them. This they never received. They have suffered every outrage in patience for many years. He does not understand the dleton's Life of Cicero that all the peculaceived. Language utterly fails us to exaress the sorrow and indignation we feel over this bad affair in which the blood of the brave and the innocent stains every hand that controls the Indian service."

The Monroe Enquirer of the 18th, reports three cases of desperate deeds of recent occurence. One between Frank Melton and John Richardson, of Auson, in which the latter was shot in the shoulder, the ball ranging down towards the spine. Not thought to be dangerous. Another, at Sandy Creek Church, in Anson, between the Vaughn brothers, and two was killed. Another, just across the line was mortally stabled.
