Yes, or No?—An Honest Love-Letter.

Dear lady,—You lend attention for awhile? I'm not the man to sue and smirk, To gain a fair one's smile. I'll ask a question, plain and brief: Just answer—yes, or No, I cannot rave as lovers rave, Or swear as lovers swear; My way is just to pass my word, And keep it, "fair and square."

A STORY FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

ONE ROAD TO FORTUNE.

"O Father! help the widow and orphans! Thou wilt not forget those who suffer, and we are lost but for thee!" These were the words that Henry heard as he woke in the night thinking it would rain; but the sound he mistook for the wind in the pines was his mother's voice. He held his breath and listened, but all was quiet now except the deep breathing of his brother and sisters in the next room. After that one cry for help the widow was silent and soon Henry heard her go to bed.

"Yes. Do you know of some one?" "I would like to come sir." "You are too small. How old are you?" "Fourteen, sir; and I am very strong." Henry stood up so straight and firmly waited, though his face showed his anxiety and disappointment so that Mr. Green was attracted to him. "What can you do?" "I don't know, sir. I've always lived at home, but I'll try and do anything you want me to."

The most thrilling tale known is that of the rattlesnake. The first science a driver teaches his mules is geology. Don't worry about the ice crop. Keep cool and you will have enough. Don't publish your acts of charity. The Lord will keep the account straight. Barber—"thin out your hair a bit, sir?" "No, never mind. My wife attends to that. Just oil it well however."
