THE MINISTER'S STORY.

I was travelling in Montana. I was disturbed the silence. The few women there on business, and did not know a soul in the town I stopped at on Satur-

In one place, larger than the rest, a dance was going on. The dancing was like the sailor's, "strong if not handsome," and calico was the prevailing costume of the girls and women. Most of them were strong and well-grown, and they had flowers in their hair and at their belts, but there were at least ten men to one woman. Whatever there was of the wild , or disorderly in the place seemed to culminate here, and over the door was a board on which were painted the words, "Lincoln House," so I suposed that it was a hotel. As for the place in which I was to hold forth on the morrow, that was as great a mystery to me as ever.

Mr. Walker decended from his counter, and addressing me with great politeness, said:

Are you quite done?" "Not quite," said I.
